A LAY OF THE LEGION.

"Oh, for one more charge with Hampton like that at Brandy's Station, and I think I could die happy!" —S. H. Jones, Captain of Company — Hampton's Legion.

Oh, for one more charge with Hampton Like that ride at Brandy's Station, When we struck the spot they camped on

With such little preparation That, by flank and front, we kept them

For an instant in a quiver— And then, like a cyclone, swept them

O'er the Rappahannock river! Oh, for one more charge with Hampton!

"Double quick!" the bugles ring— Merry music as we tramped on

In that war dance flashing, flinging, Lead and steel upon their crumpled

As they fled like frightened cattle, While we taught those vanquishing troopers

How the Southern rides to battle! Oh, for one more charge with Hampton,

With the war steeds proudly bounding And the flush of victory stamped on

Every rugged brow, and sounding Over hill and dale the clashing

Of our sabers, and the glory Of the red flags brightly flashing

Back the splendor of the story! Oh, for one more charge with Hampton!

In the saddle with The Legion, On the last spot which we camped on

In that history-hallowed region; Raise the yell that marked our coming

And that made our foemen shiver, Let me hear the bugles humming

Ere I close my eyes forever! —MONTGOMERY M. FOLSON.

The Normal School.

The Roanoke Herald has a just appreciation of the importance of the normal schools as a part of the public school system. It says:

"The appropriation for the public schools and normal colleges should be made as liberal as the finances of the State will allow. The normal colleges especially should receive the fostering care of the State. They are doing great work in the upbuilding of the State. Our normal schools and colleges are turning out a number of thoroughly equipped teachers, who are heroically leading in the great onslaught against ignorance and illiteracy. The future welfare of the State is in the hands of the school teachers. The amount of the appropriations for the normal colleges and public schools for the past two years should be increased rather than diminished. The legislature of Alabama should take no step backward, but should push Alabama forward as the leader in the vanguard of education. The material prosperity of the State entitles it to such a position, and no petty considerations of retrenchment or cheap economy should rob her of it."

CHEERFUL TALK.

A New Phase In The Present Cotton Situation.

A Farmer Who Has Found a Bright Side and Holds It Up Well—Cotton In The Country Now Means Money In The Spring—It Argues Also That The Country Is In Good Fix.

Montgomery Advertiser.

"There is one phase of the cotton situation which many people seem to overlook," said a Montgomery County farmer to an Advertiser reporter yesterday. "It is true that the cotton market is dull and the price way down low, but the fact that the farmers are able to hold back so much cotton goes to show that the country is in better fix than usual. You go out through this country and you will see from three to twenty bales of cotton on almost every farm, piled up under the wagon sheds and around the gin houses, to say nothing of the twenty thousand bales stacked up in the Montgomery warehouses."

"It may be argued that farmers are holding cotton but paying interests on their debts. Now that may be true as to some of the more extensive planters, but that is not the rule. Generally when you see a farmer holding cotton it is because they have settled up and have that much ahead. The average farmer in this country can't hold his cotton unless his debts have been paid. We all know that, and, therefore, it is a good sign to see so much cotton left in the country. The demand is bound to come after a while, and then the price will go up enough to move cotton. It is almost certain that the large amount of cotton now held in this country will be put on the market during the spring months. It means so much spot cash whenever it moves, and it will turn several millions loose in the season of the year when money is money and the farmers need it most."

"Still another advantage lies in the fact while holding their cotton for better prices the farmers have not spent as much money as they would have done otherwise. They have been more economical and squeezed down the expense account. We all know how easy it is to spend money when you've got it in your pocket. If the price had been high enough to put all the cotton on the market before Christmas a great deal of money would have been spent for things that the farmers have gotten along without, and even when they do sell their cotton they will put the money in stock and provisions and such things as they will need to make their crops with next year."

"It is indeed an ill wind that blows nobody good, and after all the country will enter upon the New Year with bright prospects."

Wait a Little While.

Yes, take your time for it is better late than never, and if you will not at once try the proper remedy to restore your health wait until your doctor says you can't live and then try it. Doctors make a mistake quite often and doctor symptoms instead of diseases. A patient complains of mysterious aches and pains, sleeplessness, gloomy forebodings, nervous disquietude, etc. He is given a liniment for his aches, a narcotic for his sleeplessness, whisky to make him cheerful, and nux-vomica or other poison to quiet his nerves. Verily, the last condition of that man is worse than the first. How many fall into the whiskey or opium habit and remain confirmed invalids until death brings relief. You don't need such stuff. You need an alternative. You need a remedy that will merely assist nature in regaining her equilibrium. You need a remedy that will assist and strengthen the natural functions of the body. You need a remedy that will assist the digestion and assimilation of food you eat, a remedy that is easy and kind to the stomach, kidneys and liver. Such a remedy is Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla. Try it and you will then get well in spite of doctors and erroneous treatment.

Death From Excessive Smoking.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 31.—George D. Sauge, prescription clerk in a drug store, dropped dead this evening while sitting in the store. The autopsy revealed that death was caused by over stimulation of the heart, superinduced by constant and excessive smoking of cigarettes, of which it is said he consumed six or eight packages daily.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOLS.

SOME POINTS FROM THE TROY COLLEGE CATALOGUE.

What Other States Are Doing For Normal Training And What Alabama Is Doing.

Birmingham Age-Herald.

President Eldridge of the Normal College at Troy, spells it "catalog."

The "catalog" then, which is phonetic and correct, of that school is on our table.

An introductory statement in that catalog has some points of interest just now, when the legislature is considering a proposition to take the life of all normal schools.

It is not likely, however, that so sensible a body of men will do a thing so foolish, because the argument in favor of normal education is wholly irresistible.

After recounting the origin of normal schools in the busy and philanthropic brain of Pestalozzi a century ago, President Eldridge gives us some facts of today. The first one in this country was established at Lexington, Mass., in 1838, and still flourishes. Several have been added in that State, and every New England State maintaining two or more. New York founded her first normal school in 1845, and now has twelve State colleges and normal departments in many of her city public school systems. She appropriates $18,000 per annum to each of her twelve State colleges, and books, tuition and traveling expenses one way are free to all students taking the obligation to teach. To quote from President Eldridge:

"For the training of teachers, New York, by State and city appropriations, pays annually not less than $300,000, or about half what Alabama pays for all educational purposes. New York has about three times the population of Alabama, but pays ten times as much for the training of her teachers, and for all educational purposes about thirty times as much. Of course, she is able to do than Alabama, but New York children need not education more than Alabama children, and Alabama schools need just as well trained teachers as New York schools, and while Alabama is not as able as New York to do, is she not able to do much more than she is now doing? Every one of the Middle and Northwestern States has from one to fifteen State and city normal schools, and even the new mountain States and territories have well equipped normal schools. Within the past twenty years normal schools have spread over all the South, Georgia being the last to fall into line.

"Alabama has seven normal schools, and in numbers leads all the Southern States, but the appropriation in all is below the average of other States, which cannot be put at less than about $10,000 per school for current expenses alone, to say nothing of buildings that cost all the way from $20,000 to $300,000, an expense not incurred by the State in Alabama, but by the locality of the school, which is a proper thing, too. No State has ever adopted a normal school system and then repealed and abandoned it, though fifty years have been given to test the first attempts.

"In the States that have had them the longest they are the strongest and constantly strengthening."

As proving the value of these normal schools, this catalogue makes a fine showing for the work done at Troy in three years.

The total number who have received normal training is 467. Of these 177 have gone forth to teach in the following counties:

Genevieve, Coffee, Covington, Escambia, Butler, Crenshaw, Pike, Dale, Henry, Barbour, Bullock, Montgomery, Lowndes, Autauga, Macon, Russell, Lee, Chambers, Shelby, Jefferson, Calhoun, Madison and others.

President Eldridge makes the following point in favor of the normal schools, to which attention has not been particularly directed:

"Those who favor the abolition of normal schools are perhaps not aware that the Peabody fund interest on $2,000,000 is annually distributed in the Southern States, excluding four. Alabama comes in for her share.

"As per Dr. Curry's announcement before the Alabama legislature in February, 1889, and since in the published proceedings of the board of Peabody trustees, the schools for the training of teachers will get most of these funds, limiting to State normal schools and institutes. It is likewise understood that the entire fund of over $2,000,000 is to be distributed prior to 1890, largely as endowments to teachers' training schools.

"Alabama now gets several thousand dollars annually from this fund for teachers' training schools, and can certainly hope to receive a large ## apportionment of the main body of the fund a very few years hence if she fosters these schools. But the Peabody trustees announce, too, that they will confine their aid to State normals in the main, and will act on the principle of helping those who help themselves. In view of all this can Alabama afford to take a backward step with reference to normal schools? By generous support now, Alabama may secure for these schools such endowments as long as will make them perpetual blessings to public education in her borders."

The entire State appropriation to the normal school at Troy is $3000 per annum.

CLEVER FEMALE SWINDLER.

A Baltimore Store Neatly Relieved Of a Sealskin Sackie And $500.

A clever but by no means new film game was played upon one of the largest ladies' goods establishments in the city. During Monday afternoon, when the store was crowded with purchasers, a smart brought-draw-up-at-the-door, and a woman alighted. She asked to be shown some fur robes, and selected a sealskin sackie valued at $500, and offered in payment a $1,000 note. But the cashier, being suspicious, sent the note to a bank near by to be verified. The customer became impatient at the delay and soon grew very indignant. Before the clerk returned from the bank she demanded her money and declared that she would not purchase the sackie. She said she was not accustomed to such treatment, and when the clerk came in and announced that the note was genuine she seized it, refused all apologies, and left the store. In about an hour and a half she returned, however, saying that she could not be suited elsewhere and must have the sackie, although she was very reluctant to patronize the store. On the tender of her $1,000 note a second time it was instantly accepted and the sealskin and $500 given her in exchange. She at once drove off, no one knowing whither. After her departure it was discovered that the note was a counterfeit, and that it had been substituted for the good one which she at first presented. No trace of the swindler has yet been obtained.

AN AMUSING MISTAKE.

Occasioned by Too Early Rising on the Part of the Governor.

Governor Jones is making himself very useful in more ways than the regular routine work of his high office. He privately told the following good one on himself, which is too good to keep:

"A few mornings since he had occasion to go down town quite early and after breakfasting at a restaurant went up to the Capitol long before the time the other officials usually make their appearance.

At the steps he was accosted by a gentleman with some ladies, presumably Northern visitors, who requested him to show them to the top of the Capitol building. The Governor readily complied with the request and with his overcoat well buttoned up climbed the many devious stairways to the dome. He showed the visitors from the eminence the many hilled city, the noble Alabama River, the monument, the blue hills of Autauga and Elmore and recounted the various historical recollections of Alabama's beautiful Capitol. Descending to the ground, the Governor's friends thanked him very heartily and the gentlemen put a half dollar in his hands as a fee for his trouble.

The Governor was considerably shocked, but held to the coin. About this time the colored janitor, who was standing near, smiled very audibly—so much so as to attract the attention of the visitors. They asked him what he was laughing at.

"Dat am the Gubner and you been payin' Gubner Jones to show you round," he replied. The stranger doffed his hat and approaching Governor Jones, tendered profuse apologies, saying he did not expect to see the Governor at so early an hour in the morning. He said that it had occurred to him that his guide was of unusually commanding presence and intelligence, but he reflected to himself that many Southern gentlemen were in reduced circumstances and accepted such positions about public buildings. He and the ladies with him were very embarrassed at their mistake. The gentleman gave the Governor his card, and the latter soon put the party at their ease about the mistake.

The visitor wanted to relieve the Governor of the half dollar, but the latter remarked that he intended to keep the money and devote it to the monument. The stranger was so overcome that he declared that he should not only have that but a fifty dollar check besides, for the same purpose, provided he would not tell the story.

Schools and Normal Schools.

Brown Standard Gauge.

Some of the people and press of Alabama are, we are sorry to say, in favor of abolishing the normal schools. We believe all such properly belong to a past age. This is the age of universal, free education, and those who oppose it are not abreast with the times. Looking over some statistics at our command we find Alabama almost heads the list for illiteracy. We give a portion of the table for illustration:

	Table for	Table for
	read C. to write C.	read C. to write C.
South Carolina	221,750	388,438
Louisiana	227,012	418,360
Alabama	370,770	485,467
Georgia	440,080	520,410

South Carolina has the largest percent of those unable to read or write and Alabama comes next in regard to writing, and third in regard to reading. The States of Louisiana and South Carolina have a very large negro population, which accounts partly for their large percent of illiteracy. In a general way this is also true of Alabama, but notwithstanding this, there is an alarming degree of illiteracy among the whites.

The first remedy for this state of affairs is the common school, and here the enemies of the normal schools will say all of the money should be expended. We say not. While it is true that our public schools are poor, there are numerous instances where the public money is not used, and others where the schools are poorly patronized when opened. This shows the need of an improved public sentiment on the school question

The Republican.

L. W. GRANT, Publisher.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1891.

THE OLD REPUBLICAN.

Its Long Career—Reflections.

The 20th day of this year of grace, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, the Republican enters upon its fifty-fifth year of its existence.

It is, by far, the oldest business institution in Calhoun County and nearly the oldest in the State; but during the whole time of its existence it has been under the management of one family.

Since it began publication, men in Calhoun County have been born, married and become fathers and grandfathers. It has recorded the birth of more than one man, chronicled his first triumphs as a schoolboy, announced his marriage, recorded his deeds of prowess as a soldier, followed his subsequent career as a politician and, finally, paid the last tribute to his memory when, after a long life of honor and usefulness, he has been gathered to his fathers, who themselves were readers of the paper before his eyes first saw the light.

The paper is inseparably connected with the life of the county and from its files along a complete history of the county could be written.

In its files two distinct civilizations are portrayed in the graphic and natural treatment of subjects before and after the civil war.

Before the war the standard cut of the office used to be a runaway negro, with a staff and bundle over his shoulder, and these appeared with descriptive advertisements of runaways throughout its pages. Now, the type makers have ceased to cast such cuts and, instead, the office is stocked with cuts of manufacturing enterprises, railroad trains, telegraph lines and trade cuts of all kinds, typical of the changed conditions which now exist in the South.

In its earlier files the paper was proud to be able to give news from Europe three months old, and headed the same "Very Latest From Europe." Now news from Europe three days old is considered stale.

Then, the people of the South took a deep and almost passionate interest in politics and were quick to resent, even unto bloodshed, the least infringement of their rights or liberties. Now, they affect to despise the politician, and very many of them, in their blind idolatry of money, are offering to lay all their liberties at the feet of Government in return for a pitiful loan of the money that has been taxed out of them for the benefit of the favored few, and which it is their privilege to withhold from the coffers of the Government.

In glancing over the pages of the old, old files of the paper and noting the high tone of public morals therein portrayed in the days of long ago, the unselfish patriotism of the masses, the chivalrous devotion of leading men to noble ideas, and seeing therein the picture of a people neither too rich nor too poor, pursuing the peaceful ways of agriculture amid plenty and open handed hospitality, we lay the paper aside reverently and sigh for the days of olden days.

But even while these old files bring up a vision of pastoral content and public purity, there is no time to give it more than a sigh. There be stirring times, and the man or newspaper who dallies along the grassy and peaceful lanes of the past will be left and forgotten. The old paper must keep up with the procession—must adapt itself to modern ways and modern ideas. One thing, however, it will not do. It will not knowingly be untrue to the people it has been springing into existence and to whom all their lives it has been both a counsellor and a friend—applauding their virtues and condemning their errors. It may have run counter to their views at times in these latter days; but it has been true to the traditions of the past, unwavering in its support of Democratic principles and at all times the true and unselfish friend of the people of Calhoun. It has suffered its seasons of popular displeasure, as all brave and frankly honest journals do; but it is today more prosperous than ever and its best days lie before it.

The Legislature meets again January 20th and will have twenty-five working days left in which to get off a vast amount of work. The sessions are too short for the needs of this great State.

The prospect for the passage of the Force bill is not so good, from a Republican standpoint, as it was a few days ago. It cannot be passed without the gag rule and Senators are making unexpected opposition to that. "Granny Hoar, of Massachusetts, is in a peck of trouble."

He Was Told to Prepare to Die.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. J. H. Harrell, Ridge Farm, Ill.: "Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) saved my life and restored my health after the leading physicians of the State pronounced my case hopeless. From childhood I suffered agonies from a constitutional blood trouble, that gradually grew worse as I advanced in years. Finally a great ulcerous sore broke out on my leg, which compelled me to go on crutches, and this, added to the Rheumatism that had set in, made me almost helpless. The physicians who, by the way, were the best in this State, pronounced the disease incurable, and told me to prepare for death. About this time my attention was drawn to an advertisement of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) and I commenced taking it, as a drowning man would grasp at a straw. I commenced to improve from the first dose, and continued to improve until I am now sound and well. The ulcerous sore on my leg has healed up, and not even a scar is left and I am to-day as free from disease as any man living. Early last fall I discontinued the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), and have not had a day's sickness since. I feel it a duty I owe to my fellowman, and to the manufacturers of Swift's Specific to make the above statement.

LOVE LETTERS.

A Christmas Wedding Brought About by Strange Circumstances.

Miss Josie Sullivan, aged twice sweet 16, last spring brought suit in the circuit court against Dr. J. R. Stewart, of Marietta, Ind., to enforce a marriage contract with him. He defeated the case and she resigned herself to old maidhood. A few months ago she answered an advertisement which appeared in the Cincinnati Enquirer, and Dr. R. G. Hamilton, of Iowa, became her correspondent. They exchanged photos and the postmaster at his place gave the doctor a good reputation. They agreed to trade hearts, sight unseen, and he sent her $100 for expenses in going to Iowa to meet him and get married. She declined to go, however, and Christmas evening he came, found his love, procured a license, got married and in two hours the happy couple were on their way to Iowa.

TRADE WITH US.

It's a Unique position we occupy as Leaders. This is forcibly indicated by the scores who interview us daily on styles. As we are asked, our judgment must be valued. If we know—as we do— isn't it most natural we should pattern our stock accordingly? Certainly.

The Dealers who do so much talking about the amount of money they save to the purchasers of clothing are the very ones who who are making it more expensive. For instance you cannot get a whole page advertisement for nothing. Neither can any man or concern afford to sell you goods for LESS than COST and succeed.

Those who advertise goods at one half or one third of their value are still making profits big enough to pay for all the charity they do to their customers.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

THE FORCE BILL AND GAG RULE MEN KNOCKED OUT.

The Resolution to Force a Vote Arrived at After Senate Met—The Proposed Republican Caucus Precipitated—The Fight—The Silver Men Will Hold Their Bill in Place—Republican Force Bill Senators—Considerably Cast Down by Their Defeat.

Washington, Jan. 5.—The action of the Senate in displacing the elections bill with the financial bill, was a complete surprise to the friends of the former measure, and several of the Republican silver Senators who voted for the measure, say it was without prior knowledge on their part. So far as can be learned, the arrangement to displace the bill was not definitely effected until some time after the Senate met though there had been quite a consultation prior to today on the subject. It is understood that Senators Stewart and Teller were the prime movers of the scheme. The matter was kept so quiet that Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, didn't know what motion was made. Senator Shoup was told not to go away as something of interest to silver was to take place, but says he didn't know what it was that was going to take place.

The Democrats are rejoicing over the displacement of the election bill, and think it has received its death blow. The financial bill must now be displaced by a direct vote and has the advantage heretofore occupied by the election bill. It has the right of way.

The resolution to bring the fight to an end was reached suddenly by the silver Senators and was precipitated by the decision to hold a Republican caucus tonight.

Edmunds was asked later in the day how he regarded the position of the financial bill. He admitted that under the rules the bill will be unfinished business until disposed of, and he added that the motion today was a total surprise to him.

Inquiry among other Republican Senators develops the fact that they were utterly taken aback at the displacement of the bill. One Western Senator who personally regards the bill with indifference, but who was not willing to abandon it now that it was a party measure, said the friends of the bill did not know what to think now for they had not had time to consider the situation. The Senator said he regarded the vote as decisive of the fate of the bill and that was the opinion of a majority of his colleagues with whom he had talked.

Mr. Spooner, one of the foremost advocates of the elections bill was seen, but would say nothing.

Mr. Jones, of Nevada, returned to the city today and the decision to hold a caucus coupled with the arrival of Mr. Jones for whom Mr. Stewart had been waiting resulted in the determination to bring the matter to an immediate issue. One of the silver Senators said it had been decided last week to bring on the fight this week but it was kept quiet, and the decision as to when the fight would be commenced and when to make the motion and in what form was not arrived at until the Senate convened this morning.

HOW IT CAME ABOUT.

The fatal accident to Hoar's hobby was caused by his extra effort to pass it. He was, indeed, caught in his own trap. On Saturday he and Edmunds telegraphed to all the absent Republican senators to be here to-day, in order to aid in bringing the elections bill to a vote. One of the most urgent telegrams was sent to Senator Jones, of Nevada, who was in New York.

AND JONES CAME IN.

Sensor Jones came. He reached here early this morning. The first men he met in the Senate was his colleagues, Senators Stewart, Walcott and Teller. The three immediately commenced discussing the chances of free coinage in the near future. Teller expressed the opinion that Hoar, Sherman and others were using the force bill to head off free coinage, and that if they were allowed to proceed in the way they had been going much longer, there would be financial legislation this session. Senators Jones, Walcott and Stewart agreed that Teller was correct.

"We will end this to-day," said Senator Jones, "if you gentlemen will consent."

Then Senator Jones mapped out his programme. It was to antagonize the force bill with the financial bill, when Hoar called up the former. Jones believed the silver men could win. The other three senators agreed. The four senators were in the rear of the chamber when this scheme was concocted. Walcott agreed to notify Senator Gorman, the Democratic leader, of what was to be done, and instructed him to have his forces ready. Jones, Teller and Stewart were to work on the western Republicans and get assistance. The scheme was worked so quickly that no one on the outside had the faintest idea of what was going on. Hoar, Sherman, Edmunds, Spooner and the other force bill senators were densely ignorant of the proposed Republican rebellion.

HOW HOAR WAS TAKEN IN.

Indeed, Hoar seemed particularly happy. He had just had Mr. McConnell, the second new senator from Idaho, sworn in, and was congratulating himself that the Republicans now had fourteen majority. He was also counting on the caucus called for to-night adopting his plan for passing the force bill. Grassy Hoar's face was, indeed, radiant with smiles. He was happy. At last the trivial matters that occupy the first hour of the Senate every day were concluded. Vice-President Morton had gone down to lunch, and Senator Harris, of Tennessee, was in the chair. It was after 2 o'clock, and as the vote on a local bill was announced, Senator Hoar called up the elections bill, as is the usual daily custom. He yielded the floor to Senator George, of Mississippi, to conclude his speech, commenced last week, in defense of the new constitution of Mississippi.

THE BOMB IS THROWN.

When George took the floor Senators Jones, Stewart, Walcott and Teller formed a group in the rear. In an instant Senator Stewart was on his feet.

"Mr. Speaker," he cried, "I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to provide against the contraction of the currency."

If a bomb had exploded there could not have been a greater sensation. Hoar rushed to the front to declare the motion not in order, as Senator George had the floor.

"But I yield to the senator from Nevada," said Mr. George.

"Mr. President," shouted Hoar, his face turning pale.

"A motion to consider a bill is not debatable," quickly ruled Senator Harris from the chair.

"Does the senator from Mississippi," cried Hoar, completely terrified as he ran to the front, "mean to say—"

At this instant Senator Gorman cried out firmly:

"This question is not debatable. I insist on the roll being called."

The clerk proceeded to call the roll, just as Vice-President Morton rushed in from the restaurant with a napkin in his hand, and the bone of a quail's leg between his teeth. A page had rushed to him from Hoar, and he had bounded into the chamber at cyclonic speed. He could do nothing. He could have done nothing had he been there all the time. Hoar was both angry and frightened. As the vote proceeded his face went first flush, then it would turn pale. Jones, of Nevada, was the first Republican to vote aye, with the Democrats, who were voting solidly for Stewart's motion to take up the silver bill. The force bill faction were surprised at this, but when McConnell and Shoup, the two new Idaho men, went with Jones, Stewart, McConnell and Shoup were followed by those of Teller, Stanford, Washburn and Walcott, making eight Republicans in all who wanted the force bill sidetracked and the silver brought out.

All during the roll call there was the most intense excitement, both on the floor and in the galleries. When the president announced Stewart's motion had been carried by 34 to 29, there was general applause.

The Democrats were jubilant, while Hoar retired from the hall and left the capital. It meant the practical defeat of the force bill, for, now that the silver bill is up, it must be considered by the Senate in preference to all other business until disposed of, or until the Senate, by a majority vote, displaces it for the consideration of other business, just like the force bill was displaced to-day.

The vote was, taken by yeas and nays, and the motion was agreed to—yeas 34, nays 29.

Mr. Sherman said that the sudden and unexpected change of scene and the introduction of a new topic of debate should not allow the revolutionary measure now proposed (by Mr. Stewart's amendment) to pass without the serious and sober attention of every senator. The fact that there had been an unexpected defection in the Republican party would relieve the minority of this body from its responsibility if it supported that measure. He appealed to the sober sense of responsibility on the Democratic side of the chamber against a measure which he regarded as revolutionary and dangerous, and the effect of which (if it should become a law) would be more destructive than that of any measures that had been proposed for years.

Messrs. Stewart and Reagan replied to Mr. Sherman, and Mr.

Reagan advocated the adoption of Mr. Stewart's amendment. He trusted that the Senate would provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

At the close of Mr. Reagan's remarks Mr. Teller obtained the floor, and the Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 o'clock a. m.

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED.

A Novel Wedding in the County of Cleburne.

Cleburne Standard-News.

In the upper end of this county on last Saturday a man by the name of Echerbush started out in company with a preacher. After traveling some time they met a woman, and Echerbush proposed to marry her, which offer she declined. Not becoming discouraged at this, he went to a man's house where there was a widow by the name of Barbara Morgan.

Echerbush—"I'm out hunting me a wife, and I am going to have one before I stop. What do you say to it, Barbara?"

Mrs. Morgan—"You will have to treat me mighty well if I marry you."

Echerbush, rising—"Here's my hand on it."

Mrs. Morgan grasped his hand, and there they promised each other, by the pale face Venus that watches over all lovers. On Sunday morning the marriage license was procured and they were married Sunday afternoon. There is economy in getting married. Echerbush's mode is a purely business matter, and I guess that is why many are not successful in getting married, because they do not talk business.

Our Normal Schools.

The Hayneville Citizen-Examiner is a thoughtful paper given to publishing well-considered editorials. Hence what it says on normal schools is entitled to weight. The following is from its last issue:

"In North Carolina there is a loud clamoring for appropriations for normal schools. At the annual convention of county superintendents of public instruction which met at Raleigh on the 20th of December, a resolution was unanimously adopted requesting the legislature to establish regular training schools for male and female teachers."

"In Alabama efforts along this line are in an opposite direction. We hope those who are so strenuously opposing Normal schools in this State are acting not through a purely selfish motive, but are misguided. If there are abuses it is the duty of those whose are the custodians of public affairs to assist in correcting them—not with the fell blow of an iconoclast to shatter the hopes which are an evidence of further light to come. In these progressive times a place for the education of school teachers is a necessity and not merely a luxury of modern civilization. Some men are opposed to any schools supported by the State, upon the ground that they should not be taxed to support another man's children. This is the narrowest of selfishness and altogether blind, for when you educate Smith's child which must associate with yours, you educate your own. Besides it should be remembered that the influence of Smith's child upon yours, in nine cases out of ten will be greater than your own. The influence of comrades upon each other is stronger than that of a man who belongs to another generation. Give us public schools and normal schools. A physician trained for his profession is more to be relied upon than one untrained. So it is with teachers. In the language of the immortal Hugo, 'Society is responsible for its own darkness.' Let us do nothing to obstruct the light."

Judge Elias Stephens, an old and highly respected citizen, died at his home near Middleton a few days since.—Hot Blast.

A PALMETTO STATE SENSATION.

A Savage Attack Made Upon the President of the State Alliance by Senator Keitt.

Columbia, S. C., January 5.—A sensation was created here by the publication of an article from Senator Ellison Keitt, making savage attacks upon J. W. Stokes, president of the State Alliance and Senator, Elect Irby.

Col. Keitt is very prominent in Alliance circles, and is county lecturer of Newberry. He was a candidate for United States Senator before the Alliance caucus. In his article Col. Keitt quotes the agreement made at St. Louis between the National Farmers Alliance and Industrial Union and the Knights of Labor, and says that any Alliance member of Congress who is in any way influenced by party caucus is perjured.

Comparing this with the statement of Col. Irby, that "whatever may be obtained for the Alliance must be obtained through the National Democratic party," Col. Keitt says:

"Is Col. Irby ignorant of his obligations to the Alliance, or is his conscience so marked that he is insensible to his sworn duty? To permit a scurvy fellow, leprosy with crime and without an element of statesmanship, to worm himself by political trickery into a high position, is not only an impediment to the work but a crime against the order. A majority of the members of the General Assembly are Alliance men, and they could have elected a clean and able man to represent our order in the Senate. All was lost by the treason of one man, Senator Stokes, president of the State Alliance."

Col. Keitt quotes a publication to the effect that Stokes would not figure in the fight for the United States Senatorship and was being carefully groomed for the governorship. Col. Keitt then said:

"Senator Stokes, president of the State Alliance and presiding officers of the caucus of Alliancemen on Saturday night, instead of governing the Alliance on Monday night before the election, was led off into a caucus of non-alliancemen, (Tillmanites), from which caucus alliancemen, not Tillmanites, were excluded. Stokes sold out the Alliance for the shadow of a chance of being governor of the State four years hence. He is responsible for the failure on the part of the alliance men to send their representative man to the United States Senate, who would do honor to the State and to our noble order. The injury resulting to the order from the treason of this one man cannot be estimated. True and brave men cannot fight under the flag borne by a traitor."

The State is now on the quiver for more sensational publications.

True Sympathy.

When one is afflicted with any form of blood disease he certainly appreciates true sympathy. It should be remembered, however, that true sympathy does not consist in saying, "I am sorry for you," but the sympathy must be shown in a material way. Either get or recommend a remedy that will cure this is true sympathy. When the fair skin is disfigured by blotches and the complexion blemished by pimples, when the unyielding sores, boils and carbuncles break out on the person, when the blood impurities impair the digestive functions, when the urinary organs show signs of decay, when the lungs grow weak and the whole system feels aching and feeble, when the appetite fails, when life seems a burden and existence painful, then will it be true sympathy to recommend to the sufferer a use of Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla, for just so sure as daylight follows darkness, will this remedy rid him of his afflictions and restore him to sound, robust enjoyable health.—Manchester News.

The Montana Legislature.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 5.—The second Legislature of Montana convened at noon to-day in Helena. The Senate and Republican House organized in the rooms provided by the Governor. The Democratic House hired a public hall and organized there. The Democrats have a majority of four in the Senate and at once recognized the Democratic House. Gov. Toole being a Democrat will recognize them and send in his message.

The E. T. V. & G. R. R.

KNOXVILLE, Jan. 5.—The E. T. V. & G. R. R. Co. to-day filed a mortgage in this county given to Central Trust Company of New York for $25,000,000. Deed recites that funds are to be used to redeem bonds, build extensions, branches and to double track main line.

HUNCOED BY A DYING MAN.

With His Last Breath He Managed to Secure $10,000.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Wm. Noble, the millionaire builder, has been swindled out of $10,000 through one of the most remarkable bunco games ever played in New York. A man lay on his deathbed and, with the full knowledge that he could never enjoy the fruits of the swindle, deliberately planned and helped to carry through the game that his confederate might reap the benefit of it. About the first of July a physician was approached by a stranger who gave him the name of James D. Weston. He said he had a friend lying very ill at the Continental Hotel and asked the doctor to call on him. The doctor went to see the friend, who said he was George C. Bowers. He was a man of about forty, suffering from enlargement of the spleen. There was no hope of his recovery.

"I cannot die yet," said Bowers. "There is a fortune in my grasp. I want only a year of life to be a millionaire." Then he said he had located a rich mine in Colorado, but a survey proved that it was not on his own claim, but on that of his friend Weston. He had not told the latter, and would not until he could raise $10,000 to buy it, and that he might leave his mother a fortune. The result was that Noble was interested in the matter and he advanced the money. Bowers died and Weston disappeared. The mine was found to be utterly worthless.

Weakness.

How many suffer from weakness! And what a distressful ailment it is. Always praying for strength and yet feeling oneself growing weaker and weaker. There is great virtue in B. B. B. (Bottan's Blood Balm) as a strengthening as well as a healing medicine. Try it as a tonic and see how much better you will feel. It will improve both appetite and digestion. It is an invigorating remedy to use while convalescing. It aids a natural and rapid recovery. In cases where an invalid has remained long in bed and bed sores or other ulcers break out, this remedy will afford quick relief.

W. M. Chestnut, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I had a long spell of typhoid fever, which at last seemed to settle in my right leg, which swelled up enormously. An ulcer also appeared which I discharged a cupful of matter a day. I then gave B. B. B. a trial and it cured me."

Pastor and Church.

Hot Blast.
A case of more than ordinary interest was recently decided by the Supreme Court in Georgia. A pastor whose salary was in arrears obtained judgment against the church organization, and had the church building levied on and ordered sold to satisfy his claim. The congregation appealed to the Supreme Court where the decision of the lower court sustaining the pastor's claim was affirmed. The Chief Justice in delivering the opinion of the court, took occasion to lecture the church pretty severely for its indifference to the wants of the pastor, and its disregard for its own financial obligations. The rule was laid down that the preacher's claim against the membership for his salary was as valid and binding as the claim of any employee against his employer. In a forcible manner he sets forth the duty of all churches to treat their pastors fairly and honestly and gives cogent reasons why the church property should be considered subject to levy and sale to satisfy the demands of the pastor against the defaulting congregation. Commenting on this case and the opinion rendered by the Chief Justice the Memphis Appeal-Avalanche says:

"The opinion will be read with great interest by clergymen all over the country who will regard him as a very Daniel come to judgment. There are many clergymen who are kept in a state of semi-starvation because of the failure of congregations to pay salaries agreed upon, and who, not having the courage of the Georgia preacher, continue to lead lives of self-sacrifice, sensible all the while of the injustice done them. Only a comparatively few clergymen are paid as well as they should be, and when the little that is promised in many cases is made dependent upon the caprice of individual members, the result is often times of the most distressful character.

It is cruel to neglect symptoms of worms in a child. Many cases of epileptic fits can be traced to this source. You do your duty when you give it Dr. Bull's Worm Destroyers. It will save the child.

The Republican.

L. W. GRANT, Publisher.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1891.

Ground has been broken for the bent-wood works in Piedmont.

The prospect now for free coinage of silver is good. This will inflate the currency and bring good times.

The Talladega Mountain Home has been enlarged to an eight page paper. It is one of the most prosperous papers in Alabama.

The way that the silver senators and Democratic senators "got away" with Granny Hoar and the force bill crowd is simply delicious.

The Oxford Echo is now owned by Mr. J. M. K. Gwinn. Mr. Gwinn is a practical newspaper man and will doubtless greatly improve the Echo.

The resumption of work at the pipe works and United States Rolling Stock Company in Anniston has brought back flush times to our lively neighbor.

County Superintendent Lane announces that he will pay the teachers of the county to whom money is due on the first quarter pay roll on Saturday, Jan. 10.

The Messrs. Dodson have commenced the publication of the Cleburne Plowboy at Edwardsville. The new paper will be favorable to the Alliance. We wish it much success.

Mr. Wm. H. Edmunds and family of Baltimore, are at the Tredegar Inn for the winter. Mr. Edmunds is one of the editors of the Manufacturers' Record.

Material for the new and complete job office of the REPUBLICAN is arriving every day, and soon everything will be in place. Then this office will be prepared to do quickly and tastefully all kinds of fine job work.

The money market is getting easier every day, and it won't be long until things will be coming along as before the late flurry. Jay Gould says money will be very plentiful by the latter part of January. Jay ought to know.

Having for the first time in the last month got a sufficient force of printers to do the work of the office, the REPUBLICAN will henceforth appear in better shape. After the return of the editor from Montgomery some needed improvements in the paper will be made.

Patrons of the REPUBLICAN are not paying up their subscription accounts as promptly as they ought to. We pay the expense of running the office cash every month and cannot afford longer to carry subscribers who do not pay promptly. The subscription list will be overhauled in a short while and many names will be stricken from them. We don't care to pay for the privilege of sending the paper to careless subscribers.

The Anniston Hot Blast says that Hon. W. P. Cooper was in Anniston a few days ago and there stated that he could not favor the bill to issue county bonds for road improvement, which the Anniston Board of Trade is asking for, on the ground that the masses of the people of the county are opposed to it.

We believe that the county would be greatly benefited by the issue of bonds for road improvement, and no part of it more so than the rural districts; but still Mr. Cooper is right not to put the bill on the people if they do not want it. No legislation should be forced upon an unwilling people. In matters of legislation Mr. Cooper will faithfully try to reflect the will of the people when he knows what that will is, and in doing so he will be in full discharge of his duty as a Representative.

Cotton Factory.
It is expected that work will be shortly commenced on the new building of the cotton factory. Some delay has been experienced in getting the plans.—Piedmont Inquirer.

An Alliance Agent Short.
St. Louis, Jan. 7.—A special from Lawrence, Kas., says: L. H. Corse, Alliance exchange agent in this city is short. It seems the farmers who had shipped their farm products through Corse are out about $4,000.

Corse claims that the losses were due to the fact that the shipments were made to unreliable firms. The products were sold in Chicago and Denver, but the commission merchants failed to remit. A committee has been appointed by the Alliance to investigate the affairs of the exchange.

New Railroad.
The Jacksonville Mining and Manufacturing Company passed a resolution Thursday authorizing President Burke to at once contract for the grading of a broad gauge railroad from the steel works to the Butler Green ore banks and the mineral lands of the company adjacent thereto. The distance to these ore banks is about eight miles. The grading will begin as soon as men and material can be secured for the work. This makes the second railway into the steel plant grounds, the road from the works to the sandstone quarries being now almost complete with rail laid.

THE NEW TURN

WHICH AFFAIRS AT THE CAPITAL HAVE TAKEN.

Hoar Has Acknowledged Defeat and Admits that There is No Use of Making Any Further Wrangle Over the Force Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Senator Hoar to-day admitted that the action of the Senate yesterday ended the force bill fight.

"There is no use in my pushing this bill any further," he said. "The eight Republican senators who voted against the bill, and it would be useless now to attempt to pass it."

Hoar and Edmunds having given up the fight, all the Republicans now agree that the bill is dead. The Democrats are of the same opinion, but they do not wish to appear too confident just now. Henry Cabot Lodge and Senator Hoar were loud in denouncing a trade between the Democrats and the free coinage Republicans to-day. All the Democrats and Senator Teller vigorously denied the charge. Hoar, however, says that Teller will never be able to persuade the country that he did not make a trade. However that may be, the force bill is dead, and Hoar is buried with it.

The old Granny went to the White House this morning to discuss the defeat of his pet measure with the President. Harrison was as usual as a hornet, and threatened dire vengeance upon the Republican senators who rebelled. He insisted that Hoar should bring the bill before the Senate again if possible and have a vote upon it. Hoar, however, replied that it would be useless to make such an attempt, as it would be impossible to force a vote with the opposition, as strong as it was demonstrated to be yesterday.

"Yesterday's work kills the Republican party," Hoar is reported to have said, when he left the President this morning.

The advocates of the force bill having abandoned that entirely have now turned their attention to defeating the free coinage bill into the debate of which the Senate has now plunged. But the free coinage amendment to the financial bill is practically certain to pass the Senate by a large majority. The chances are likewise favorable to its adoption by the House. Reed defeated it last session by arbitrary rulings, but he has positively refused to exercise his power as speaker to prevent a vote on free coinage this time. He is disgusted with the ingratitude shown by the President for what he did last session, and has frankly informed the anti-free coinage senators that he will not be a party to any more dirty work to save the President from having to sign or veto a free coinage bill. A majority of the House, like the Senate, favors free coinage, and unless the bill is smothered in the House committee on coinages, the chances are Mr. Harrison will either have it to sign or veto. The silver men say Harrison will not dare veto it. They say he will probably sign it, and at the same time send in a message stating that his signature is given under protest. The discussion over the bill in the Senate will probably last two weeks.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST MAN.

How He Inspired Fear in Even the Bravest.

From the New York Tribune.

From the opening of his career Napoleon inspired fear in all who approached him. What this fear was Madame de Stael has told us, and it would not be possible to improve on her vivid description or her piercing analysis of the strange character before which she felt herself humbled and subjected. She saw him first on his return to France after the treaty of Campo-Formio. To a feeling of admiration, she says, there quickly succeeded a very marked sentiment of fear. "Yet," she proceeds, "he had at this time no power, and it was even thought that he was threatened by the dark suspicions of the directory." There was in his position, therefore, no reason for such a feeling as she experienced. The fear she felt "was only caused by the singular effect of his personality upon nearly all who approached him." Then she dissects this effect subtly: "I have seen men worthy of all respect; I have also seen brutal men; but there was something in the impression made upon me by Bonaparte which recalled neither of these. I very soon perceived that his character could not be defined by the conventional terms in common use; he was neither good nor bad, nor gentle nor cruel, in the ordinary meaning of the words. Such a being having no peer could neither experience resentment nor sympathy; he was either more or less than a man; his attitude, his spirit, his language, are evidences of an alien nature. * * * Instead of becoming reassured at seeing Bonaparte often, I grew more apprehensive the more I saw of him. I felt, in a confused way, that no emotion of the heart could touch him. He looks upon a human creature as a fact or thing, and not as his own like. He neither hates nor loves; for him nothing exists but himself; all the rest of the world are mere ciphers."

Madame de Stael was a woman, and it might be said that she was therefore peculiarly sensitive; but men, and strong men, and rough, hard men, experienced the same mysterious domination, the same inexplicable physical terror in Napoleon's presence. When Gen. Angereau went to see the young Bonaparte, intending to bully and overawe him, he found all his purposes melting away in the presence of his proposed victim. He remained mute, took Napoleon's orders, and retiring humbly declared to Massena that the little devil of a general had frightened him. Another rough soldier, noted for his severity and brutality, went through the same experience. Vandamme, speaking of the emperor, said: "This devil of a man exercises a fascination upon me that I can't understand. Though I fear neither God nor devil, when I approach him I am ready to tremble like a child, and I would go through fire and water for him."

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Irrepressible Donnelly in His Favorite Role.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 6.—In the Legislature the House stands: Democratic 43, Republican 40, and Alliance 31. One ballot was cast to-day for speaker, resulting: F. E. Searls, Republican, 41; H. C. Stivers, Democrat, 40; E. T. Champlin, Alliance, 31. The House then adjourned. In the Senate, after the installment of Senator Ignatius Donnelly, the Alliance leader moved to take a recess until 3 p. m. This was carried by a vote of 30 to 23. When the Senate reassembled at 3 o'clock it was to elect officers who had already been decided on by a conference committee of the Alliance and Democrats, F. N. Vandusen, Alliance candidate for secretary, headed the list, and the Democrats and Alliance candidates were elected by a vote of 37 to 25.

Then came a hot parliamentary battle over the rules, in which Ignatius Donnelly was the sole spokesman for the Alliance and Democrats and John Day Smith chief speaker for the Republicans. Senator Donnelly insisted that inasmuch as the Alliance-Democrats combine was in the majority, the committees on railway, grain and warehouses should be moved to have last session's rules continue and committees be appointed to decide on permanent rules, he objected vigorously. He contended that the majority should elect committees and nothing should be done to allow their appointment in the customary way by the lieutenant-governor, since that official was of a different political faith from himself (Donnelly) and the majority of the Senate. He considered this but the beginning of the battle to death with corporations and he was ready to fight. A resolution was adopted practically carrying out Donnelly's views.

The parties in the House are as far from any compromise as ever. Democrats and Alliance men have been in communication with each other through conference committees all the afternoon and still at it to-night, but neither seems inclined to yield and both want the speakership. The fact that they have managed to fuss in the Senate may have a tendency to bring them together in the House.

They Are One.

The New York Times in discussing the Alliance in the North West says that it is really a bridge for many men heretofore opponents of the Democracy to enter the ranks of that party. After combatting the subversive proposition it says: "The demand in regard to the 'governmental control of railways' is carried somewhat too far, but it is based upon real abuse of corporate power and responsibility, and the objects aimed at, 'that all discriminations shall cease, that reasonable rates shall be established, that watered stocks shall not receive the reward of honest capital,' are altogether legitimate, and are ends towards which legislation is constantly striving. The minor points of the St. Paul platform are not such as to preclude members of the Alliance from acting with the party which is in sympathy with its more important purposes, and that will be the logical result of the present tendency."

When another national canvass comes on to arouse the people on the issues of the day, minor and doubtful questions will be lost sight of and attention will be concentrated upon one or two vital matters. The leading issues of 1892 are almost certain to be reform of the tariff and the burial of sectionalism. On those there seems to be not the slightest difference between the Farmers' Alliance and the Democratic party, and they seem likely also to be in harmony by that time upon questions affecting the currency. No substantial ground will be left for independent political action, by the Alliance, and it will become obvious that its main purpose can be best achieved by the success of the Democratic party. It is evident that the farmers have been hoodwinked for the last time into supporting the policy which the Republican party have persisted in maintaining in obedience to those interests that profit by it at the expense of the mass of the people. If they act upon national questions in accordance with the demands of their own interests, as they now seem likely to do, at least in the great Northwest, it will change the balance of parties in several States and obliterate the ancient lines of political division.

The Shoe Factory Will Soon be in Operation.

The building for Piedmont's shoe factory is completed, the machinery put in and the industry will soon be in operation.

A Post reporter was at the building yesterday, and had a talk with Geo. H. Kingman, Esq., of Brockton, Mass., the general manager.

Mr. Kingman says that the industry will be in operation by the first of next month.

The carpenters have finished their work and machinists are busy placing the machinery.

The best modern machinery will be used and the plant will be one of the finest in the South.

When the industry is well underway 150 hands will be employed and its full capacity will be 1,000 pairs per day.—Piedmont Post.

His 55th Birthday.

The Jacksonville REPUBLICAN on the 20th instant will enter upon the 55th year of its existence. It has covered the most interesting periods of the State's history, and has done its full share towards bringing Alabama to the high position she now occupies. It was from its commencement under the management of the late Hon. J. F. Grant, honored and respected of all men in Alabama, and since his death its present editor, Hon. L. W. Grant, has ably conducted it. The Advertiser is glad to learn that "it is to-day more prosperous than ever, and its best days lie before it." Why should it not prosper when it reiterates the principle that has always guided it: It will not knowingly be untrue to the people it has seen spring in existence and to whom all their lives it has been both a counsellor and a friend—applauding their virtues and condemning their errors. It may have run counter to their views at times in these latter days; but it has been true to the traditions of the past, unwavering in its support of Democratic principles and at all times the true and unselfish friend of the people of Calhoun.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Mr. J. A. Gaboury, Jacksonville's capable civil engineer—was in the city Saturday making some final business arrangements preparatory to his departure for New York where he goes to push through a scheme or two for the benefit of this immediate locality. Mr. Gaboury regards it a little early to venture on Gotham after the financial fright of the past few weeks, but he thinks that by the middle of the month everything will be sailing along prosperously.—Anniston Evening News.

He Was Told to Prepare to Die.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. J. H. Harrell, Ridge Farm, Ill.: "Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) saved my life and restored my health after the leading physicians of the State pronounced my case hopeless. From childhood I suffered agonies from a constitutional blood trouble, that gradually grew worse as I advanced in years. Finally a great ulcerous sore broke out on my leg, which compelled me to go on crutches, and this, added to the Rheumatism that had set in, made me almost helpless. The physicians who, by the way, were the best in this State, pronounced the disease incurable, and told me to prepare for death. About this time my attention was drawn to an advertisement of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) and I commenced taking it, as a drowning man would grasp at a straw. I commenced to improve from the first dose, and continued to improve until I am now sound and well. The ulcerous sore on my leg has healed up, and not even a scar is left and I am to-day as free from disease as any man living. Early last fall I discontinued the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), and have not had a day's sickness since. I feel it a duty I owe to my fellow-man, and to the manufacturers of Swift's Specific to make the above statement.

WHEN THE NEW WEARS OFF.

He was a youth, and she, a maid,
Both happy, young and gay,
They loved—and life to them was fair—
As one continuous May.
The crooners saw this happiness,
And said: "Ah! love is blind;
You're happy now, but ere will come
When the new wears off, you'll find."

They married, and then their life grew rich
With calmer, riper joy;
They were as man and wife more fond
Than when a girl and boy.
Their "friends" could not endure the sight,
That "friends" could not endure the sight,
And said, with worldly wit:
"It will not be so bright and fine
When the new wears off a bit."

Ah, well, the new wears off, of course,
And then, what did they find?
An oldness which was better far,
For love is not so blind.
As selfish care; and loving hearts
New joys will always find.
So, when the new wears off, they'll find Old love the more complete.

—Myrtle K. Cherryman in Detroit Press.

THE TRAINING OF GIRLS.

They Are Deficient in Knowledge of Every-Day Affairs.

One very serious deficiency in the education of the average girl is her ignorance of the ordinary affairs of life. Nearly every man, whatever his profession, has a general knowledge of these things; he knows how the new building goes up, understands the principle of the steam engine, can tell why crops are rotated or explain the construction of a suspension bridge. As a result he finds everywhere suggestions for thought, and his sympathies trained in many directions. This is because, when he was an intelligent boy, his attention was continually called to these things—a course of action which would never have been thought of had he been merely an intelligent girl. There is a feeling that all this kind of information is superfluous, if not positively out of place, in the training of young girls; so they grow up with their fields of observation and reading narrowed to a minimum, says a writer in Kate Field's Washington. On account of these latter ignorances they find themselves surrounded by a world full of mysteries, of which the least unintelligible are clothes and servants. Is it any wonder that they fall back persistently upon the few concrete interests which seem to be within reach of their understanding?

There was a little flurry of discussion not long ago about "Why women read novels." Well, they read them for the reason that men do, because novels are the best expression of the quality of modern life; and they read more of them than most men can, because they have more leisure. For exactly the same cause women read more poetry and more metaphysics than their husbands and brothers. The reason they do not read so many newspapers and serious periodicals is that they find them full of stumbling blocks, on account of the narrow limits of their education in practical affairs. How many women understand anything about a new election law, or an improved system of drainage, or the condition of Irish politics, or the latest application of electricity? This ignorance is not the more excusable because it is shared by a great many men. It should be a part of every education, whether of girl or boy, to make a not too interesting world as amusing and suggestive as possible.

Heart Failure, Sudden Death.

The prayer of the Christian pleads for guardianship against sudden death, and yet alas, how many leave the world for better or for worse with out a single moment's warning. He died of heart failure. The tired and weary heart failed while engaged in its momentous task of pumping the blood from the arteries and forcing it into every big and little vein that the wasting tissues of the flesh might be replenished. How important then that the great stream of life be kept pure and its corpuscles red and active, lest the fluid grows sluggish and clogged, and the heart in an extraordinary effort snaps with out a signal the thread of its muscular strength. It is your duty as one who loves the life that God has given him, to assist nature in maintaining free action of the circulatory system by keeping the blood in a state of purity and health. Nature has supplied healing and strengthening herbs for this purpose. Science has discovered what they are and the eminent Dr. John Bull, of Louisville, Ky., has blended them in his superior preparation known as Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla. Demand it of your druggist. Take no other.

In the Sleigh.

"This robe is a bear skin, isn't it, George?" the fair one asked, as they sped along the hard, smooth road.
"Yes, darling, why?"
"Oh, I had reasons for thinking so."
A great, strong light shone on George, and afterward he drove with one hand.—Boston Herald.

POLITICAL.

Sockless Simpson, having been sent a present of hosiery from Jersey City, returned the bundle with a note which read: "Sir, our forefathers refused to drink tea because it was taxed 3 per cent; and held a tea party in Boston for the purpose of getting rid of the stuff. I have just finished figuring up the tax upon those stockings, and I find that it amounts to 70 per cent. I will wear no socks until the tax is taken off."

The Indiana commercial travelers' convention gave Harrison and Wamamaker black eyes last Saturday. Some time ago the editor of the Oswego, (N. Y.) paper published an attack on the commercial travelers of the country, accusing them all of being a menace to good society. President Harrison afterward appointed this editor postmaster at Oswego. The various traveling men's organizations of the country have condemned the appointment. The Indiana association was not slow to show its disapproval of the appointment. By a standing vote it censured President Harrison and the Postmaster General for naming such a man for a public position, and the secretary was instructed to notify the President and the Postmaster General of the action of the association.

Representative Oates, of Alabama, tells a little story from which he draws the moral that there is no need of a shot gun policy to influence the colored voters in the South. There is, he says, a planter in his district, named Reynolds, who has two large plantations and employs several hundred negroes. He has built a Methodist church on one plantation and a Baptist church on the other, and he hires, at his own expense, two preachers. When the latter cannot settle the disputes which frequently arise, the congregations appeal to Mr. Reynolds, and his decision is final. He looks after the creature comforts of his men with such fidelity that, when election day comes, they go to the polling places and vote for his friend, the latter being in every case the Democratic candidate.—New York Times.

Representative Wise, of Virginia, indicates in a letter to the St. Louis Republic what he thinks should be the course of the Democratic party in the next Congress. The substance of his letter is in the closing paragraph, in which he says: "The power of taxation should be used only for public purposes, and not for the enrichment of favored classes or to enable individuals to start new enterprises or to conduct old ones. Paternalism ought to be stamped out, and the people encouraged to the cultivation of a manly self-reliance. The lobbyists and underlings should be scourged from the Capitol with a whip of scorpions. Sectionalism should be banished, so that all will feel that in the safety of the Union is the safety of the States. If we use our opportunities wisely I believe we shall retain power for a long period of years; but if madness and folly shall rule in our councils there will be another revolution, and we shall have deserved the fate of those unhappy Republicans who have been driven in disgrace from place and power."

Blow Your Nose.

Alas, too often an admonition of a mother to her child. The poor innocent has probably inherited catarrh and is not responsible for its sore and filthy nostrils. Did you know that tender soft thin skin lining the nostrils, called the mucous membrane, extends all over the body. Every organ in the system and every orifice at the surface has this thin delicate lining as a protector. So you see what a fix the body is thrown into when the mucous membrane becomes irritated and inflamed by constant friction with poisonous matter in the blood. Catarrh, leucorrhea and piles result frequently from this condition of affairs. These diseases are mere symptoms of impoverished blood. Now B B B or Botanic Blood Balm, will by enriching the blood cause all such symptoms to disappear. Give it a trial.

Henry Reeves, Shellman, Ga., writes: "Any man or woman who is suffering from piles and will not use Botanic Blood Balm is a fool, and it takes me to tell them so, for I suffered two years with bleeding piles, and B B B relieved me at once."

J. J. Hardy, Toocosa, Ga., writes: "B B B is a quick cure for catarrh. Three bottles cured me. I had been troubled several years."

James W. Lancaster, Hawkinsville, Ga., writes: "My wife was in bad health for eight years. Five doctors and as many or more different patent medicines had done her no good. Six bottles of B B B has cured her."

HIS LIFE SAVED BY HIS NERVE.

A Young Man's Dangerous Situation and How He Got Out of It.

From the Chicago Tribune.
An incident, which recently took place at Plymouth, Mass., called for the possession of a good deal of pluck on the part of the two actors. A young man of about twenty was leading a bull that had always been peaceably inclined, when the animal seemed to be seized with a sudden fury, and made a lunge at him.

The stick which was fastened to a ring in the animal's nose snapped short in the young man's grasp, and almost before he knew what had happened he was thrown into the air from the bull's horns.
His clothing was torn nearly from his body, his cheek was cut open, and he was much bruised, but when he fell, almost under the feet of the bull, he had presence of mind enough to realize that his only safety lay in keeping so close to the head of the animal that he could not be thrown up again. He managed to get three fingers of his left hand into the ring in the bull's nose, while with his right hand he grasped one of the horns.

Meanwhile the farmer who owned the animal, and who is an excellent shot, had got a rifle from the house, and hastily put into it two cartridges. The young man, finding his strength failing, called out to the other to shoot.

"Fire, for pity's sake," he said. "I can't hold on much longer."
The bull, astonished by the clutch of his victim, had for a moment stopped; but when he should again start there would be small chance of the life of the young man. The animal stood so that his forehead was presented to the farmer, but the young man's head was within a few inches of the spot which the bullet must strike.

"If I fire," the farmer called, "the ball may flatten on the bone and kill you on the rebound."

"Fire anyway, and quick," the other cried out, as the bull showed signs of moving.

The farmer put his rifle to his shoulder and fired. The shot was so true that the bull dropped in his tracks without a struggle.

Hog Raising in the South.

It is fair to say, says the Aberdeen Examiner, that in nineteen out of every twenty houses in Monroe county today without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the occupants, spare-ribs, backbones, jowls, sausage, crackling and other things incidental to Southern hog killing, constitutes a large portion of the bill of fare. Hundreds of our farmers will make meat enough to spare for sale; and all will save the meat of a few hogs. The colored farmers are no exception to this; one is recorded who put up 1,600 pounds and has hogs enough yet to give him 1,500 pounds more. The Southern Live Stock Journal says: These hogs were mostly fattened on sweet potatoes, the corn crop on many farms being almost an entire failure, while the potato crop was most bountiful. Sweet potatoes have already contributed largely to pork making in this section of Mississippi.

I had a slight stroke of paralysis which frightened me very much. My health was very poor and the doctors gave me medicine for heart disease, but I grew weaker. My cousin recommended Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla, which certainly has benefited me greatly, for I feel in splendid health.—Samuel T. Phelan, Dayton, O.

Singular Ways of Office Seekers.

"It's a curious world," sighed a Georgia politician, as he knocked the ashes from his cigar and gazed thoughtfully out of the window.

"In what way?" asked his companion.

"Well, politically," was the reply. "I know a dozen men in my county who have left home, wife, children, business, to run after a miserable county office which isn't worth $500 a year. And for such an office they are willing to pay $500!"

"By the way, colonel," said his companion, "what office are you running for now?"

"Coroner, sir," shouted the colonel with great enthusiasm, "and I'll have it if it costs me $1,000."—Atlanta Constitution.

PROTECTION DESIRED

AGAINST THE CHEAP IRON FROM SOUTHERN FURNACES.

Pennsylvania Furnaces Going Out of Blast, Owing to Southern Competition.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat publishes a special dispatch from Pittsburgh that is exceedingly interesting to all the South.

The special goes on to say that "the American Manufacturer, Joseph D. Weeks, editor, in Friday's issue will throw considerable light upon the subject of the general shut-down of pig iron furnaces in Shenango and Mahoning valleys."

Mr. Weeks is thus quoted: "The first reason given by the furnace owners why they cannot continue operations under present conditions is the large amount of Southern iron now being shipped into that district. They assert that since May 20, 1890, from 40,000 to 50,000 tons of this iron has been received in the valleys, displacing an equal amount of local production, which is now filled at the furnaces. For months a fair quality of Southern iron was delivered at the Youngstown mills for $14, and at this price large sales were made. Last week the prices quoted were $13.25a13.35 for Alabama pig, of a quality which permits of the run of 25 per cent, as a mixture is making a very good grade of bar iron. Southern furnaces are enabled to enter the valley markets mainly because of the co-operation of the railroads. Southern railroads virtually enter into partnership with the furnace men by hauling material and products under the sliding-scale arrangement. In this way iron is hauled from Birmingham, Ala., to Youngstown, O., a distance of about 800 miles, for $4.10 per ton. The rate paid on pig iron from Youngstown to Pittsburgh, 64 miles, is 80 cents per ton. In the one case this is 1/2 cent a ton a mile, in the other 1.23c. In moving furnace supplies the Southern roads again favor the furnace men. Pocahtonoc coke is sent into the Chattanooga district at the cost of Connellville coke in the Mahoning and Shenango valleys, though the distance in the one case is 424 miles and the other 130. In many cases Southern pig iron has to bear but one profit, while the Northern producer must pay a profit on each of his raw materials. The sliding-scale, which fixes freight rates according to the selling price of the iron, is another illustration of the manner in which Southern railway companies co-operate with furnace owners. In selling ahead furnaces are protected by the railroads, even if in affording such protection the sliding-scale has to be suspended. As the Mahoning and Shenango valleys have paid as high as $250,000 a month in freights, furnace men there hold that they should be protected from Southern competition by making the rate on iron from the South commensurate with that on iron going out of the valleys. Moreover, they hold that the railroads, in giving advantages which enable them to secure one ton of freight from the South, lose three tons, they would get by protecting the trade in the valleys. In answer to the argument that they are being squeezed out by the inevitable changes in the trade and the natural advantages of newer districts, the valley furnace men say that, being situated midway between the ore and coke supplies, with the best facilities for distribution, they should be able to produce iron in competition with any part of the North, and would do so were they protected from Southern inroads."

The Manufacturer states that three-fourths of the furnaces have already shut down, and that the remainder will close to-morrow. This will throw 10,000 men out of work.

Shiftless Tricks For a Farmer.

To try to farm without manure.

To plant more acres than can be taken care of.

To work with poor tools, and to sow poor seed.

To buy at public sales what is not needed because it sells cheap.

It is shiftless to keep poor stock. A poor cow eats as much as a good one.

To lounge about stores and groceries when it is possible to be doing something at home.

To raise frogs and mosquitoes in the front yard. To have a pig wallow in the road near the gate.

To allow the hogs and sheep to wander at their own sweet will over their owner's and neighbor's premises.

To let the cattle fodder themselves at the haystack. It saves a little labor, but the waste will make the owner poor.

THE FORCE BILL'S

Disastrous Effect on Southern Republicanism.

From the Manufacturers' Record.
The New York Tribune has determined to enter upon a new "campaign of education" for the laudable purpose of convincing unprejudiced minds throughout the land that a protective tariff is essential to national progress and prosperity. In furtherance of this plan, Henry Hall, Esq., business superintendent of the Tribune, has sent circular letters to gentlemen known to be the friends of protection, or to be engaged in industries whose success must depend upon its continuance, as well as to every industrial and development company in the South.

One of these letters was received by Major G. B. West, of Tredgar, Ala., where he is at the head of a land and industrial company that has $1,500,000 capital. Born and educated at the North, and imbued with its ideas, he has always been a protectionist of the Henry Clay school and an earnest Republican. He has an intimate acquaintance with most of the prominent Southern and Northern men to whose wisdom, ability, enterprise and capital the South, in large measure, is indebted for its present prosperity.

The following is Major West's scathing reply to the Tribune's appeal for assistance in its undertaking:

TREDGAR, ALA., Dec. 31, 1890.
Henry Hall, Esq., Business Superintendent "Tribune," New York City:

My Dear Sir—I have read with interest your esteemed circular letter of the 24th inst. on the subject of the new "campaign of education" undertaken by the Tribune. You will pardon me for expressing the conviction that the movement is much like locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. Three years ago I pleaded very hard with leading Eastern protectionists to meet the flood of free trade propaganda in the South, and to spend some reasonable effort and means in the encouragement of the strong, respectable, but unorganized protection sentiment in our mineral States. At that time I knew numbers of Southern business men who were Republicans at heart, and who would have come to the front with enthusiasm and force if they had offered any guarantee that the next Republican administration would turn its back upon the flood of free trade propaganda, and would have held control of the party organization in the South. Such a policy would certainly have led to the formation of a strong, intelligent and wealthy bloc of protectionists, and the publication of the "Southern Protectionist." We are disappointed to see that you have dominated several once doubtful States in this section.

At the time I write of, leading members of the American Protection Tariff League held out the idea that should the Republican party win in the impending presidential campaign, something not only tangible, but great, would be done to bring out the latent protectionism here and party leaders were at the same period promising to make a reorganization of the party in the mineral Southern States would be accomplished in such a way as to give control to respectable elements of society, and to make it possible for decent people to take active interest in party affairs.

These prospects and promises encouraged us greatly, and especially after a delegation of prominent protectionists visited President-elect Harrison at Indianapolis, and received satisfactory assurances that the policy of his administration in the matter. A Southern Protective Tariff League was put in process of organization. Leading cultivated and wealthy men in the "Virginia North Carolina Tennessee Alabama and Louisiana" were actively engaged in the movement. A call for a convention at Chattanooga was printed and ready to send out. The writer, in conjunction with several others, commenced the publication of the "Southern Protectionist." We appealed to the Northern organization for assistance to push this educator everywhere throughout the South. We were told that all the money of the Northern club would be used for the congressional election of 1891, and that if we wanted to undertake any Northern propaganda, we must find the means ourselves.

Next, it became manifest very soon after the inauguration of President Harrison that the party organization in the South was not to be changed, that none of the assurances extended to the Southern protectionists were to be given practical effect. The elements generally remained quiet, except as had a few Republicans, the Republican party dissolved our embryo Southern Protective Tariff League. We stopped publishing the "Southern Protectionist." Then the force bill gave the coup de grace to the whole thing. Republicans engaged in every department of material development, production or trade everywhere protested unanimously against the bill. Their protests have been unheeded. Except as to negroes and a few Republicans, the Republican party died in the South with the force bill. Respectable men of affairs and family—miners, manufacturers and merchants—in this section much prefer a low tariff, without the force bill, to a high tariff with the force bill, and consequent race and social disturbances. You will find that the thinking Republicans here who understand the social question of the section much better than Eastern doctrinaires can be expected to vote for the well attacked by a national party which is only a humanitarian in the case of the negro, while it is at the same moment highly and violently inhuman in its opposition of other colored races, even in the extent of violation of solemn treaty obligations.

In short, what with indifference at a time when action might have been productive of good; with the violation of promises and the commitment of the party irretrievably to a policy vastly obnoxious to every element of decency in the South, our Northern protectionists and Republicans have at a blow murdered protection and respectable Republicanism in all the Southern States, with the conditions of which the writer is at all familiar. Both elements are dead beyond the power of a first-class miracle. You will only waste your money in trying to work on them in any of the common methods I have named above. With respect, truly yours,

[Signed] G. B. WEST.

It would be passing strange under any circumstances that a paper of the Tribune's standing and wealth should appeal to those engaged in Southern development to contribute money for its gratuitous circulation, but to do it now, while it is vigorously and continuously advocating a measure that cannot but injure the very interests from which it solicits assistance, is a piece of presumption without parallel in the history of American journalism.

Warning to Workmen.

To the Editor of JACKSONVILLE REPUBLICAN, Jacksonville, Ala.:

DEAR SIR:—We earnestly entreat you to copy in your paper the printed article sent with this request at once and oblige. Your friend,

J. A. H.

Anniston, Ala., Jan. 7, 1891.

We see a statement in the papers of our town that is making an impression upon the minds of men, that the causes and trouble for which the many workmen of this town have been idle so long, are all settled, and that all things are well, and that work in town is plentiful. We wish to say just here, in defense of ourselves and other workmen who may come here through these false statements, that there are, here in this town already, eight hundred or a thousand men who are waiting for work, are willing to work, and whose families are in need of their work; some of whom have not got their money for work done in November, 1890 yet.

The statement that over two hundred employees went to work yesterday is a mistake; only a very few went to work. They seem to think that the black smoke which went upward from the smoke stacks, and moving of the great wheels, was bread and butter food. We would like to see the man, woman or child that can eat the smoke and find what proceeds from a smoke stack and fly wheels of any machinery.

So there is no one here to work but a few laborers and two or three "scabs" who would like to have an extra feather in their caps as other wood-cocks, trying to supercede some of the foremen, and we hope they may succeed in getting one, if they have to have it attached to the other end.

So we will say to all workmen there are men a plenty here in town already to do all the work there is here to do. So we warn you in this article not to come here for work at present. When all things are well we will notify you. So let us be brothers and helpmates to each other as workmen; what helps you helps me; then don't let us get in each others way.

Your brother workman,

J. A. H.,

THE "SMART ALECK."

He is Really and Truly a Fearful and Wonderful Affair.

The Smart Aleck is a sublimated product of modern civilization, the precipitated vapors of fermented progress. He is omnipresent and irrepressible, protean in manifestation, and sublime in self-assertion, as sensitive as a soft crab, and pervasive as a ringworm or a bad joke. He knows exactly how he could have won the battle of Gettysburg, and how Napoleon could have granulated and pulverized Wellington at Waterloo. Nothing can make you short-winded quicker than the Smart Aleck's contempt for the consensus of enlightened opinion on any given subject. He would sweeten his coffee with salt if he didn't have to drink it himself.

The Smart Aleck is very proud of his knowledge of all the arts of making a fortune, especially when his own life has been spent in a varied and picturesque familiarity with a lack of money. His faith in his own omniscience is something sublime, and equaled only by the lordly condescension with which he is always willing to dispense wisdom and information. He shows his knowledge about him as a tender-hearted philanthropist scatters pennies on a street crowded with beggars. He will complain of the prevailing plethora of money, while carrying a brick-bat in his coat-tail pocket in order to make his coat-tails hang right in doing duty as a screen for a disabled pair of trousers. He will declaim against a proposed inflation of the currency, while his last week's wash is still quarantined at a Chinese laundry. He is generally of the opinion that our climatic conditions would have been much better if the earth revolved around the sun on a triangular, or rectangular, instead of the present crude and botched arrangement.

The Smart Aleck is, altogether, a fearful and wonderful affair, and promises to be with us a long, long time.—J. A. Macon, in Puck.

A Model Officer.

George Wilson, deputy sheriff of Calhoun County, is certainly a model officer. He has served as deputy sheriff almost continuously since the war, having come down to each successive sheriff as a part and parcel of the office. During all the twenty-five years of his official labors Mr. Wilson has never had a prisoner to escape, and all his other services to the county have been characterized by the same careful attention and close regard to detail. There ought to be two of George in every county in the State.—Anniston Evening News.

THE RANDOLPH TRAGEDY.

MORE PARTICULARS OF SHERIFF JONES' MURDER.

The Dastardly Assassin Safely Makes His Escape and No One Is Suspected—Citizens Offer a Reward for the Capture of Tate.

RANDOLPH, Jan. 12.—On last Saturday at 10 p. m. one of the most brutal murders known in the history of this county took place in the town of Randolph, Bibb county, Alabama. It will be remembered that some time in October, 1890, Mr. W. B. Head, one of Bibb county's best citizens, was shot and killed by Jim Tate. Tate fled from the county, and a reward of $400 was offered for his capture. A few days ago Mr. R. H. Jones, sheriff of Jackson parish, Louisiana, arrested Tate, and the sheriff, Mr. O. P. Head and the prisoner arrived here Saturday night, stepped off the train and started to the hotel, when some unknown party shot and killed Sheriff Jones. When the sheriff fell Tate made a leap, snatching the chain from the hands of the sheriff and made his escape.

There is a standing reward of $400 for Tate, and the citizens of Bibb county have doubled the reward, making $800. Tate is about 25 or 30 years old, weight about 135 pounds, and has dark brown eyes close together, dark sandy hair and a little stoop shouldered.

On account of this man Tate two good citizens have lost their lives. Sheriff Jones died praying for the man that shot him. It is to be hoped that every good citizen of Alabama will do his duty to bring this murderer to justice.

CITIZEN OF BIBB COUNTY.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

RANDOLPH, Jan. 12.—The most horrible and tragic event in the history of this county occurred at the depot Saturday night upon the arrival of the 9:30 north-bound passenger express. Among the passengers were Mr. R. H. Jones, sheriff of Jackson parish, Louisiana, Mr. Oliver Head and James Tate, the latter a prisoner, arrested in Louisiana, charged with the fatal shooting of Mr. William Head early last fall, near Six Mile, in this county, and for whose apprehension and delivery to the county authorities a reward of $400 had been offered. As the parties alighted from the train in the broad glare of the lamps at the depot and hotel, a bold assassin, scarcely ten feet from his victim, raised his deadly pistol, and with two shots fired in rapid succession, almost instantly killed the sheriff, who was leading the manneled prisoner to the hotel. The murderer escaped under the cover of darkness, the prisoner following his escape at the same time, making his rescuer. There is no expressed conjecture as to the perpetrator of this awful deed. The remains of the murdered man were carefully placed in a neat casket by kind hands, and, with his money, watch and other effects, were consigned to his bereaved family in Louisiana.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO ss. LUCAS COUNTY.
Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars for each and every case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

The Fifty-Fifth Year of The Republican.

"The old landmarks of the father to be guides for the son."
We well remember in 1842 the weekly visits of the REPUBLICAN to our father's house, and week after week until 1858 it was a welcomed visitor.

That old familiar face and honor trusted pen have been laid away. But the young hand and handsome face still bear the marks, cherishes the hope and guards the rights of the sons and sires of old Calhoun.—Oxford Voice.

He who talks too much makes two mistakes—reveals his ignorance and fails to learn wisdom from the lips of others.

TREDEGAR.

What the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad Has to Say About It.

The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway system has issued an elegantly illustrated pamphlet of Tredegar (Jacksonville), a copy of which has come to our table. Among the illustrations we note the Tredegar Inn, the Tredegar steel plant, as it will appear when complete; the public square, Francis avenue, bird's-eye view of Tredegar from the steel plant, manganese ore bed, Tredegar National Bank, the big spring, Tredegar from Mountain View and residence of Gen. Burke. The big spring illustration is most charming.

The book treats first of the material development along the East Tennessee line, and then particularly of the resources of Tredegar and the development now going on here. Touching Tredegar the book says: "It is doubtful if any other point in this or any district of the region, moving like Tredegar, upon lines of legitimate industrial development and avoiding and even opposing all tendencies to 'boom,' have attracted the continental attention that it has in the short period that covers its history. The interest excited concerning Tredegar has been and is so active that the passenger department of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway has deemed it advisable to issue the present pamphlet to satisfy public curiosity on the subject and to answer on the spot the numerous questions and inquiries that for some time have been coming in from all parts of the Union. The passenger department of this system is alive to the eagerness with which the American people are now seeking accurate information respecting the greater developments in the Southern States, where they are in strong financial hands, and rest upon ascertained bases of unusually valuable and available mineral resources controlled by the interests creating such developments. The admirable character of the Tredegar movement, as an instance of town building upon the basis of minerals, mines and manufacturing plants, with real estate values left to take care of themselves and to enhance normally as a result of population, improvements and the requirements of a manufacturing and trading community of importance, renders the growing city of sufficient interest to the tourist, investor and home-seeker to justify this publication."

The book then gives a beautiful description of the immediate country in which Tredegar is situated, and discusses its "astonishing manganese deposits," as well as its iron, bauxite, barite, galena, sandstone, limestone, etc., its fine forests and streams, and its fruitful farm country. After giving analyses of the iron and manganese ores, the book adds: "Tredegar has more first-class ore in its immediate vicinity than any other industrial point in the South, with the possible exception of Birmingham." The great find of bauxite is regarded as especially valuable. The remainder of the book is taken up with a complete review of the industries of Tredegar, including those accomplished and projected—its schools, churches, social advantages, etc., etc. It is destined to do the town a vast deal of good. The road will distribute them all over its lines.

Blind Tom is an inmate of an asylum in New York, an idiot and a pauper. His power to evoke music from the keys and strings of any instrument is gone.

By the will of Emma Abbott the bulk of her three millions of money is to be divided between six charitable institutions of New York. Several churches are also liberally provided for.

The Alliance Legislature of Kansas are having things their own way and dispatches of the 14th announce that Ingalls' defeat is now regarded as certain.

The Illinois Legislature, by the combined vote of the Democrats and Alliance men, has instructed the United States Senators from that State to vote for free coinage of silver. The Republicans refrained from voting.

The United States Senate passed a bill for the free coinage of silver the 14th inst., by a vote of 33 to 27—a majority of 12 voting for free coinage. Sixteen Republicans voted with Democrats for free coinage and three Democrats voted with the majority of Republicans against it. The bill will yet have to pass the House and the indications are that it will be defeated there.

After the disposal of the silver bill in the Senate the 14th, Hoar moved to call up the Force bill and on that motion there was a tie vote. The Vice President cast his vote in favor of calling up the bill, and it is again before the Senate. The close vote by which the bill got again before the Senate indicates that it will be again eventually defeated on a straight vote.

Congress is called on to vote a credit of $100,000,000 to the projectors of the Nicaragua canal. We hope no Alabama Congressman will vote for it. It is a huge job.

Senator Quay's force bill is regarded as a stab at Hoar's force bill. Quay's bill goes farther than Hoar's bill, and authorizes the President to declare martial law and invade any section of the Union where he does not think a "fair" election can be had. Granny Hoar's force bill is having a hard time of it.

Gov. Jones' attitude toward the lawless elements at Catherine, in Wilcox county, shows him to be a man of great fairness and determination. The people of the State will uphold him in strict maintenance of the law. The running of Brice (Republican) out of the community by toughs was an outrage that the Governor has justly rebuked.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

The Campaign Opens this Week—The Situation and the Farmers.

This week all eyes will be on Springfield, says the Chicago Herald. The United States senatorial question is the absorbing topic among the politicians, great and small. Both Democrats and Republicans realize that a hard battle is to be fought. The contest is so close, in fact, that a mistake either way might decide the victory. In many respects the situation resembles the exciting political scenes when Logan and Morrison were struggling for the mastery. It was the death of a Democratic representative and a still hunt on the part of the Republicans, resulting in the election of their man in a strong Democratic district, that carried the day for Logan. The same sharp practices will be put in operation, necessitating the closest watch by both parties. That both sides are fully alive to the situation there is no room for doubt. As the situation now stands the Republicans have 27 votes in the Senate and the Democrats 24, while in the House the Republicans have 73, the Democrats 77 and the Farmers' Alliance 3. While the Democrats have the best of it, inasmuch as they have 101 on joint ballot to the Republicans' 100, it requires 103 for a quorum, and the Republicans can always avoid an election by refusing to vote. But should two Republicans vote or two of the farmers vote on a ballot for Senator, an election would take place. On the other hand, if only 99 Democrats and 100 Republicans were present at time of a joint ballot for Senator, and three or more Democrats and all the Republicans should vote, a Republican would be elected. Again, if all the Republicans and a minority of the Democrats were present when the roll was called and all the Republicans and the farmers should vote a Republican would be elected. It will then be seen how the farmers hold the balance of power. If they vote for their own candidate the Democrats, by having their men on the field, will elect Gen. Palmer. However, it is not likely that the farmers will be so easily won over and waste their votes in this way. They intend to use them to their own advantage. The claim is set up that they are seeking legislation favorable to the farmer, and that their votes will go to the party that gives them the most encouragement. The Democrats being in the majority, it is most likely they will turn to the Democratic side for relief.

Fatal Shooting at Monroeville. Monroeville, Ala., Jan. 13.—A fatal shooting affray occurred here yesterday morning in which Bob Graham shot and fatally wounded John L. Stallworth.

A Mule Dealer Killed.

Montgomery, Jan. 12.—Shortly after nine o'clock last night, B. P. Young, of Dadeville, Ala., was knocked from a trestle by a passenger train and instantly killed. He arrived in the city on a freight train a short time before his death with a car load of mules, bought for this market in Columbia, Tenn. After reaching the stock yard, he left his mules and started to walk down the track to the city, when a passenger train overtook him on the trestle and knocked him off. The body will be sent to Dadeville for burial.

Death of Mrs. Reeves.

Mrs. Reeves, wife of W. P. Reeves, died at her home on the 5th inst., after a long illness, with consumption, being confined to her bed for six months previous to her death. She left six children, the oldest being twelve years and the youngest one year of age. Mrs. Reeves was a member of the Baptist Church at Antioch. She was a good wife and mother and left many friends to mourn with her husband and children in their sad bereavement. She was buried at New Hope Church, where she had a baby buried three years ago. The largest assembly that had been known for years attended her burial.

While engaged in this rather unpleasant work George Carr, the chief clerk, picked up a $100 in an old yellow envelope. The appearance of the envelope indicates that it has been lying there a long time.

Mrs. Leslie Warner, of Nashville, Tenn., on repairing to her room about 10 o'clock one night this week, discovered that her bureau drawer had been rifled and $1,500 worth of diamonds taken from it. ## The Outlook.

The New York Herald's Washington correspondent, after a careful forecast, concludes that the Republican majority in the next Senate will be reduced to six.

It would have been still smaller but for the success of the Republicans in stealing one or two States which the Democrats had fairly won at the polls.

The Herald's correspondent makes still brighter prophecies for the Fifty-third Congress. After March 4, 1893, he thinks the Democrats will have gotten control of the Senate. There will then also be a Democratic president and a Democratic house, and the Herald editorially lays out the following policy to be pursued by the party when it gets into full control of the Government.

"First and foremost will come tariff reform—a cutting down of McKinley prices, and a consequent cheapening of the necessities of life. This will be a welcome boon to wage earners. Then the drain on the Treasury caused by recklessly extravagant pension legislation will demand attention, and should there be an infamous Force law on the statute book that will call for summary treatment. When these and other evils are remedied the way will be cleared for the enactment of important measures affecting the interests of the country, which have been neglected by a Republican Congress given to the advancement of party schemes. To realize these blessings the people have only to speak at the coming election as they spoke at the last."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

—Prof. Gibson has gone to Montgomery at the instance of the State Superintendent of Education who has called the presidents of the State Normal Schools together for conference, touching the best interests of those valuable institutions.

—The Jacksonville Reading Club met at the residence of Hon. J. D. Hammond last Monday night, at which meeting the name of the club was changed to the "Lundy Club." The club will have its next meeting at the residence of Rev. M. H. Lane. A full attendance of members is anticipated.

—Misses Clara and Gertrude Jenkins, after spending a few days with their friend Miss Addie Hammond, left for their home in Gadsden Tuesday. These young ladies are always welcome guests in Jacksonville and their many friends hope that they may return ere long.

—At last week the doors of Rowan Dean & Co. were closed, while stock was being taken and the books of the firm adjusted. This was preparatory to a trade then on foot, by which Mr. P. Rowan bought out the interest of his partners in business. The business will be conducted in future by Mr. P. Rowan.

—The Calhoun County Alliance at its last meeting at Middleton, the 12th inst., adopted a resolution requesting the Legislature not to pass the pending bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Anniston City Court throughout the county. It is said that petitions are also being circulated and numerous signed, throughout the county, to the same effect.

—The address of Anniston workmen published on first page of this paper was delayed in transmission for want of sufficient postage and therefore reached us too late for publication last week. At the request of the workmen we publish it, not knowing whether or not the conditions have been changed since it was mailed to us. We hope that soon all things will be all right between employers and employees. It will be very greatly to the interest of all parties to have things thus.

It's a Unique position we occupy as Leaders. This is forcibly indicated by the scores who "interview us daily on styles." As we are asked, our judgment must be valued. If we know—as we do— isn't it most natural we should pattern our stock accordingly? Certainly.

The Dealers who do so much talking about the amount of money they save to the purchasers of clothing are the very ones who who are making it more expensive. Those who advertise goods at one half or one third of their value are still making profits big enough to pay for all the charity they do to their customers.

THE SOCKLESS STATESMAN.

[Rose Field in the Kansas City Star.]
Good mother, bring my overalls and lay 'em on the bed;
And get a little timothy to sprinkle on my head;
And put some tallow on my boots, for all the neighbors say
That I must start for Washington afore another day.
You re-collect I told you how we met 'em at the polls;
And routed 'em and scattered 'em and made 'em hunt their holes;
No, never mind them other things, jest lay 'em on the box.
For my name is Jerry Simpson, and I don't wear socks.
It was a mighty tussel that the people give the ring,
And where the fight was thickest you could see old Jerry spring;
He didn't wear no plume; he weren't no Henry of Navarre;
But every time he hit a lick he alius left a scar.
And when the doubtful contest was at its whitest heat,
He just drew off his boots and waded in with naked feet;
And all the farmers shouted, as they see his tellin' socks;
"Hooray for Jerry Simpson, which he don't wear socks."
I told 'em on the stump about contemp'ring us things;
How the tariff robbed the farmers, and the railroads was their kings;
Jest how I stood on silver, and jest 'twixt the boys and me—
How I 'at agin the rebel hordes way back in '63.
And the boys got up and hustled, as they never did afore;
And the last I heard of Keely, he was feelin' mighty sore.
So, mother, pack the boxes tight, and fasten down the locks,
And mark 'em "Simpson, Washin' on, P. S., no socks."
When I get down to Washin' on, and ketch the Speaker's eye,
Just watch the opposition, for the fur's agin' to fly;
I don't know what committee room will alius be their king;
But I s'pose I'll have to be content to start on ways and means.
And Kansas will be mighty proud the mornin' that she learns
That when I rise to take the floor the other house adjourns.
While up into the galleries the eager public flocks
To hear the Kansas Clero, who don't wear socks.
And when the day is over and the boys have 'all got through,
I'll represent my State on Pennsylvania ave;
And Blaine or Harrison or any other man of note
Will be glad to stop and get a little hayseed on his coat.
And if that Philadelph' dude who polkad with the queen,
And dresses up his legs in silks, appears upon the scene,
I'll show them high aristocrats the difference between Yankee
And blunt old Jerry Simpson, if he don't wear socks.
So, mother, get a move, and re-collect your country calls;
It's time that I was thundering in legislative halls;
As once down to the theater I heered an actor say:
"Marry, come up, my soul's in arms and eager for the fray!"
There go the boys a-marchin' and a-bollerin' in the lane.
They've come to see their Congressman and take him to the train;
They know the value of a man with hayseed in his locks,
Which his name is Jerry Simpson, and he don't wear socks.

BANCROFT IS DEAD.

Close of the Long and Useful Life of the Historian.
George Bancroft, the historian, died in Washington on Jan. 17.
His death was not due to any disease, but to the gradual failing of age.
He was born October, 1800.
The community was greatly shocked this evening by the news that George Bancroft, the venerable historian, was dead. It had been realized that Mr. Bancroft could hardly survive much longer the increasing infirmities incident to his extreme age, but he has been in cheerful spirits and apparently better health this year since his return from Newport, than for several seasons past, so that his death was sudden and unexpected to all save a few intimate friends, who knew of the attack of illness which carried him off. His death occurred at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon. The end was quiet and peaceful, and came after a period of unconsciousness lasting about twenty-four hours.
He was in fine health and spirits, had an excellent appetite and good faculty for sleep until last week, when he caught a slight cold. He had always lived carefully but generously, and had said repeatedly within the last six weeks that he had never slept better nor had a better appetite.
Notwithstanding his cold, he continued to seek outdoor exercise every day until Thursday, when he took to his bed as a matter of precaution. His whole illness was less than three days. He failed rapidly yesterday, and became unconscious in the afternoon, in which he remained until the end.
Among the latest edibles seen in the grocery shops are preserved nuts—chestnuts, walnuts and other kernels put in bottles just like fruit. It is a German idea, and they are said to be delicious for dessert.

Uncle Tony and the Devil.

"The big African gorilla in Robinson's circus has escaped!"
When this news spread among the negroes on my father's plantation, near the mouth of the Roanoke river in North Carolina, there was consternation in every cabin.
Uncle Tony, a pious old darkey, added to the terror of the negroes by declaring that the big monkey was the devil. My brother Henry argued with him, but in vain, and as I was then a boy of twelve I had my doubts about it, but feeling somewhat inclined to agree with uncle Tony.
Big Ben, a fellow servant of uncle Tony, asserted that he had seen an animal which answered to the description of "the hairy man," as the negroes called the gorilla, quenching his thirst from the water of a small stream which ran into the mill pond belonging to my father; but as Big Ben was noted for the fertility of his imagination, neither whites nor blacks paid the slightest attention to the story. One bright Sabbath morning, Henry, uncle Tony and I had been rambling about the woods at least a mile from the nearest human habitation. We stopped to rest under the shade of a large oak which grew near the margin of the mill pond at a point where the underbrush had been cleared away, affording an almost unobstructed view for a considerable distance in all directions. Henry and I were reclining lazily on the roots of the tree, watching the movements of a small brown squirrel which was playing hide and seek among the branches over our heads, when uncle Tony suddenly broke the silence.
"Don't you hear dem dogs?" cried he.
"Don't you hear Marse Tom Jackson's deer hounds down yander in de swamp?" Dat is old Mingo in the lead, an' de one jest behine him dat kinder wimles when she barks is ole Ginger. I kin tell dem two dogs, because—Marster Jesus, help me now!"
Henry and I sprang hurriedly to our feet. Not fifty yards from our position, stood the great gorilla we had seen in the circus. Our enemy, for such we recognized him to be from the first movements he made, advanced towards us a few paces and then suddenly stopped short, glaring at us with an intensity of rage and defiance which it is impossible for words to describe. As he stood there erect in the shadow of the great trees, slowly swaying his great body from side to side, and swinging his enormous arms backwards and forwards with the regularity of pendulums, his appearance was so hideous and so horrible that both my brother and myself were speechless with terror, unable to move a limb. But uncle Tony dropped down on his knees and began to pray:
"Oh, Lawd! Good Lawd!" cried he, "have mercy on dis pore ole nigger. Swing down de chariot, Lawd, an' take dis chile from off de ground; swing down de chariot, Lawd, jest dis one time if you do please an' let me git on board. I ain't nothing but a pore ole fool nigger nobow, an' I did think when I seed dat creeper in de sirkis dat de white folks had shot ole satan up for good. I'll stop fishin' er Sundays; I'll stop foolin' round hen houses an' watermill patches in de night time; I'll—"
Uncle Tony's devotions were abruptly brought to a close by other actors appearing on the scene. A pack of powerful deer hounds, twenty-seven in number, issued from the depths of the thicket on the trail of the gorilla. Hearing the clamor close behind his heels, the great brute turned about to face his pursuers. Now came the critical moment. Would the dogs dare to attack the gorilla? Or would they sink away when face to face with him, and leave us in his power? Beating his breast with his huge paws till woods and fields resounded with the strokes, and giving utterance to his peculiar roar, half bark and half growl, with an occasional shriek which sounded like the last wail of a human being in the death agony at the stake, the gorilla stood his ground awaiting the approach of his enemies. The dogs did not immediately attack the gorilla, but began to circle around him, keeping at a respectful distance and baying loudly all the while. At length old Mingo, braver than his fellows, ventured within the reach of those sinewy arms. With the quickness of a lightning flash, the gorilla caught him from off the ground, and in the twinkling of an eye, literally tore the poor dog's head from his body, and threw both head and body contemptuously aside. For a few moments the surviving members of the pack stood as mute and as motionless as stone; and then, actuated by one common impulse, all sprang upon the gorilla. It was a scene long to be remembered. The dogs fought with the fury of demons; and the gorilla seemed to possess the strength and courage of the arch-fiend himself.

self. In the shade and the sunshine, now standing erect and now rolling on the ground, striving with all his might to free himself from the fangs of the deer hounds, the gorilla battled for his life. Uncle Tony forgot his prayer and began to cheer the dogs. "Lick him, Ginger! Set to him, Blackgal! Look at ole Blue! ole Blue an' Littleboy! I tell you gentimins dat griller is er turnin' in close places! Ole blue has got him by the throat. Hold him Blue, hold him! Don't I wish I was a dog? Now's your time, Hector! Now's your time Nimrod! Shake him Smut, shake him! Didn't you see dat griller fling ole Rollyfox, ergin that stump? Run, Marse Henry; run, chillun, run, run! Ole satan has out done de dogs, and ole time is come! Run, for your lives! Ole Blue is dead! Ole Blue, an' Ginger, an' Blackgal, an' Yallergal, an' Nimrod, an' Littleboy! Run, chillun, run for your lives.
Suiting the action to the word, uncle Tony darted off with the utmost speed of which his long legs were capable. By this time Henry and I had recovered the use of our limbs, and we were not slow in following his example. Every dog was either dead, or too desperately wounded to rise from the ground. We looked behind us in our flight and saw the gorilla limping off on all fours in the direction of the swamp. Our story spread like wild-fire. In a few hours the whole neighborhood was under arms. The gorilla was found wandering aimlessly about and was easily dispatched. He was not only bleeding from at least a hundred wounds, but both eyes had been torn from their sockets by the infuriated hounds. People came from far and near to view the fallen monster and to mourn the untimely fate of the noble dogs. Since that memorable Sabbath morning more than fifty years have come and gone; but even to this very day there can still be found a few hoary-headed children of Africa who firmly believe that old Nick himself fought his last fight "wid Marse Tom Jackson's deer hounds down yander in de woods not fur from the Clayton mill pond."

"You see funny things about a theatre," said Alf Hayman, of the Columbia. "I was in the box office during the sale for the matinee when a fine looking and handsomely dressed lady came up to the window.
"A ticket, please," she says.
"Harry Sommers hands her a parrot seat and said, 'One fifty.'"
"Oh, I don't want to pay that much," she says with a smile.
"One dollar," says Harry, handing out another.
"Haven't you any nice seats for seventy-five cents?" says the lady sort of cooingly.
"Oh, yes, ma'am," says Harry.
"Let me see," says the lady, "I guess a fifty cent one will do."
"She got it and went to the door, where she offered the ticket for herself and three children. Well, you know ice would petrify around Geary. He just stopped the party.
"Four tickets," he says.
"What!" says the lady, as serene as a May morning, "you don't charge for these children?"
"Not if they don't go in," said Geary in a tone that would put frost on the windows.
"The lady sails back to the box office, humming a little tune, where she hands in her card.
"Will you call a messenger boy and send these children home?" she says, and then she goes back and laughs for two hours and a half."

SHOT AND KILLED.

By the City Attorney of Chattanooga, Tenn.
A horrible tragedy occurred in Chattanooga on Jan. 18th. S. M. Fugett, cashier of the South Chattanooga Savings Bank, was shot and killed by his father-in-law, Judge J. A. Warder, who is the city attorney of Chattanooga.
Judge Warder is shot in two places. One ball penetrated his breast at the right nipple, the other took off the index finger of his left hand.
Mr. Fugett is the only child of Judge Warder, and is shot in the thigh, a very dangerous wound.
From the evidence at the coroner's inquest, it appears that Judge Warder came home at 1 o'clock in a very drunken condition, and went to Mr. and Mrs. Fugett's room, where the shooting took place as soon as he entered.
Mr. and Mrs. Fugett lived with Judge and Mrs. Warder, on College street. There were seven shots fired, five by Judge Warder and two by Fugett.
It is said Mrs. Fugett was the first person shot, and Fugett then fell dead, shot through the heart. He was found with a newspaper in one hand and a pistol with two chambers empty in the other.
Mrs. Fugett was lying over him, with her arms entwining him, piteously crying for some one to save him.
Judge Warder staggered to a neighbor's house, and is now there in a precarious condition.
Mrs. Fugett is also unable to speak, and what took place in the room, aside from the shooting, is not yet known. From evidence before the coroner's jury, it appears Judge Warder frequently would come home drunk, and abuse his wife and daughter, and the women would appeal for protection to Mr. Fugett.
Such trouble occurred late Saturday night, and Fugett quitted his father-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Fugett have been married but two years, and have a five months' old baby.
Mr. Fugett is a young man about twenty years of age, and a popular, successful lawyer.
Judge Warder is one of the best known lawyers in this State. For six years he was United States district attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, appointed by President Hayes.
He was a brave and gallant Union soldier, and is one of the most prominent Republican politicians in the State. He owns considerable property, and has a large and lucrative practice in this city.
He is a man of the highest culture, a most polished and affable manner. His domestic affairs were always supposed to have been the happiest. The affair created a great sensation here, and opinion seems to be general that it was the result of a crazy drunk.
To Purify the Breath.
The freshest eggs and lemon juice, sugar, almond oil and rose water, mixed and beaten for hours, smelling delicately as if a rose had been dipped into it sometime should make a tempting cosmetic to create beauty or restore it to itself.
We all feel the charm of "balmy breath that doth almost persuade justice to sheath her sword," and this bottle of clear red liquid with a few drops poured in a glass of water will also purify the breath and all within the lips that one need mind how closely the hearer's attention hangs upon them. The same liquid is sovereign for dyspepsia, and reduces the interior to an amiable state very quickly.
It is nice to have something one can depend on to neutralize the breath from a decaying tooth in that state where the dentist cannot work it or undo the effects of a sleepless night, which never fails to leave the breath affected. A few drops of such a tincture will often prevent the toothache which comes of eating sweets. In short, a really good toothwash is the first of cosmetic necessities.
Recognizing Boyd as Governor.
Lincoln, Neb., January 18.—By a vote of 14 to 13 the senate yesterday passed a resolution recognizing Jas. E. Boyd as governor, without prejudice to the powers contest. This is the first action in either branch of the legislature which recognized Boyd as governor.
The shirt fronts of the best dressers are as plain as plain can be. They are amply wide, and the collars on the shirts are attached.

"GONE TO REST."

[Published by Request.]
She has passed this vale of tears;
Her sufferings and trials are o'er;
She will spend the remaining years
With loved ones to part no more.
'Twas the 23rd of July,
When the merciful and just God
Brought her joys and dimmed our eyes,
And we hid her beneath the sod.
It was a sad and mournful day
God claimed her for his own,
And said she could no longer stay;
But we might sigh and weep and mourn.
In a bier drawn by angels
Dear Ida was borne away
To that celestial shore where strangers
Are unknown and sweet hearts play.
Ah, sad and stricken is the mother,
Father sorrowing and distressed,
But grieve not, brothers and sisters, for
The other.
Who is so happy and blest.
Our departed loving and loved one;
Remember, was willing to die;
She has gone to her home forever,
But not to her home in the sky.
In our dreams we will look to that Heavenly land;
A mansion prepared for us in that home,
And we see the fair form of our darling stand
With beautiful hands that are beckoning
us come.
Oh, why was she taken so early in life?
It has saddened our lives and our hearts
seem wivory;
Just in the prime of womanhood might She bidden on earth to blossom in heaven.

MRS. DAVIS'S BOOK.
THE WIDOW OF THE EX-PRESIDENT COMPLETES HER MEMOIR.
Hitherto Unpublished Facts About the Confederacy.
Richmond Dispatch.
New York, Jan. 19, '91.
A book that will cause a great deal of excitement in literary, social, and political circles is soon to be issued in this city. It is entitled "Jefferson Davis, ex-President of the Confederate States: A Memoir by his Wife."
Ever since the death of the champion of the Lost Cause, Mrs. Davis has had repeated and flattering offers from publishers all over the country to write a history of the inner life of the Confederacy, and especially of the family and the man himself who was such a prominent leader in that great movement. Only a year before his death Jefferson Davis began to write his own autobiography. He was so weak from illness that he was compelled to dictate the matter to a friend. But even then he was unable to get through with more than an introductory chapter. From this point his wife has taken up the thread of the story and the result is two large volumes containing over 1,700 pages. While a Lieutenant, Davis fell in love with and married Miss Octavia Taylor, a daughter of Gen. Zachary Taylor. The latter strenuously opposed the match, but his anger was turned to grief soon after, when his daughter, after being married a year, died. From this union there was one child, who is also dead.
HIS SECOND MARRIAGE.
After his return from the Mexican war Mr. Davis went to his home in Mississippi, where he met Miss Varina Howell, of New Jersey. Although born in the North, Miss Howell's sympathies were all with the South and the old home of her ancestors. Her beauty and wit captivated the bronzed hero of the Mexican war, and a year after they were married. Davis was at that time about forty-one years of age, and Miss Howell considerably younger.
Mrs. Davis's attachment to her husband bordered on idolatry, nor did she less warmly espouse the cause which he championed. Since his death she has always signed her letters and other documents to him as it was necessary to affix her signature of Jefferson Davis. All through the trying days of the civil war Mrs. Davis was the constant companion of her husband and did much to lighten the many burdens laid upon him indiscriminately by friend and foe alike.
By his last marriage Mr. Davis had four children, two of whom are dead. Of the remaining two, Miss Winnie Davis, who was born in Richmond at the close of the war, and who has become famous as the "Daughter of the Confederacy" is best known. She is a beautiful girl, of an extremely lovable disposition, and is the constant companion of her mother. Not long ago her engagement to be married was announced, but owing to declining health the match was broken off.
The other daughter married Mr. Hayes, formerly of Memphis, but now a Colorado banker. As Jefferson Davis left no male descendant her son is expected to perpetuate his name. When the boy was born the State of Mississippi, by an act of the Legislature, changed his name to

DAVIS; so the boy is now known as Jefferson Hayes Davis.

HIS VINDICATION.
The era is closed, the cause is lost, but the people remain and revere the memory, and mourn him dead, whom living, they delighted to honor. It is for them that I write this memoir and vindication. In vindicating him I also vindicate them, for he spent his long life in their service, and was rewarded with their love and confidence from his cradle to his grave. In the doing of the sacred task I shall endeavor to be guided by the spirit that inspired him during his whole life; a spirit of unyielding devotion to truth and duty, of uncompromising antagonism against all assailants of justice, without regard to their prejudices or their numbers, but mindful of the fact that every opponent, even to the death, is not necessarily an enemy, and that sincerity of belief is entitled to respect, even when found arrayed against us. I shall endeavor to do exact and equal justice to the antagonists of the South, as well as to her leaders; 'naught to extenuate nor set down aught to malice.' If I fail, it will be because my love for the Southern people and their Lost Cause and leader may unconsciously influence my judgment of the men and beliefs that were arrayed in deadly conflict during the war between the States.
The accompanying picture of Jefferson Davis is taken from a portrait in the possession of Mrs. Davis, and is her favorite picture of her late husband.
The early chapters of Mrs. Davis's book are devoted to the early life of her husband and his ancestors, who came from Wales and located at Philadelphia. There were three brothers, and the youngest of these, Evans Davis, removed to Georgia, then a colony of Great Britain. He married a widow named Emory and had one son, Samuel Davis, father of Jefferson Davis.
Mrs. Davis quotes Jefferson Davis as having described his father and mother in the following language:
"During his service in South Carolina my father met, my mother, and after the war they were married. Her maiden name was Jane Cook. She was of Scotch-Irish descent, and was noted for her beauty and sprightliness of mind. She had a graceful, poetic mind, which, with much of her personal beauty, she retained to extreme old age. My father also was unusually handsome, and the accomplished horseman his early life among the 'mounted men' of Georgia naturally made him. He was a man of wonderful physical activity."
"The last time I saw my father he was 64 years of age. He was about to mount a tall and restless horse, so that it was difficult for him to put his foot in the stirrup. Suddenly he vaulted from the ground into the saddle without any assistance. He was usually grave and of a stoical character, and of such sound judgment that his opinions were a law to his children, and quoted by them long after he had gone to his final rest, and when they were growing old."
In the other chapters of the book Mrs. Davis enters into the private and public life of the family, and answers the attacks that have been made upon her husband in his several capacities. The social life of the Confederacy is also described with great minuteness, and as Mrs. Davis was such a prominent figure in that sphere, her words will be read with interest, especially as it contains much matter that is new.
Mrs. Davis is living in New York this winter with her daughter Winnie, who is quite ill.
The Third Party.
Hon. Wm. S. McAllister, Alliance State Lecturer of Mississippi, who was a delegate to the late Ocala convention, says:
"The third party faction came to Ocala pre-determined to capture the convention for their system of political thought. They are as a rule, disappointed office seekers. They were in a wild pursuit for spoils.
"The southern wing of the Alliance has confidence in the wisdom and justice of the democratic party. It knows that democracy has fought its battles in the past, and will do everything possible in the future to relieve oppressed agriculture. But it does not think 'that bestowing office upon incompetency is agricultural relief'—and nobody recognizes this fact more fully than the third party men. Like all mercenary bands, these third party advocates forgot their instructions and former teachings. They forgot principle and lost sight of everything except the allurements of prospective office, they are a motley mass of malignant matter. But enough of their personnel. Their southern representatives are dealing in firebrands. They know that the preservation of Caucasian civilization in the South depends upon white unity, and is therefore the white man's only safety."

"The movement will fail in the south. The farmers of the south will never be misled by political lepers. When these third party men are shown up it will be seen that they are the extant remnants of carpet bag government. Mind you, there will be a third party. It will be composed of negroes, scalawags or a few disappointed office seekers. It will put the conservative people of the south to some trouble, but they will defeat it."
"I believe it will carry a majority of the western states. This is accounted for by the dissimilar social features of the two sections. The better people will espouse it because they have just realized the enormities of republican legislation for the past twenty years. They are traditionally opposed to the democratic party, and therefore the new party will catch them."
ITS HALF CENTURY.
Some Kind Words For The Republican From The Pen of a Distinguished Journalist.
Col. Robt. McKee, in the Piedmont Inquirer, has the following kind things to say of the old REPUBLICAN and its management. Nearly every paper in the State, which has noticed the age of the REPUBLICAN this month, places it at fifty years; when in reality, with this issue, the paper completes its fifty-fifth year. Coming from the source it does the warm words of praise from the Inquirer are peculiarly pleasing to the REPUBLICAN, and we make no excuse for reproducing them:
"This week the Jacksonville REPUBLICAN rounds up a full half century of vigorous, active, and useful existence among the newspapers of the State.
"It was founded by the late Hon. J. F. Grant, and at his death passed into the hands of his son, Hon. L. W. Grant, by whom it is still owned and edited.
"The elder Grant was noted for earnestness, sincerity and integrity. In 1870 some facts became known concerning the Democratic nominee for State Treasurer which were calculated to raise some doubt of his entire fitness for a position of so much responsibility, and the State executive committee of the party, making a virtue of necessity, assumed the power to depose him and name another candidate in his stead. Mr. J. F. Grant was the man chosen for this position, because his exalted character and eminent services were such as to preclude any suspicion of the good faith and patriotic motives of the committee in making so important a change in the State ticket on the eve of an election, and were certain to command the confidence and support of the people. He was elected, and served four years.
"Hon. L. W. Grant entered the Confederate army when a headless lad and served with marked gallantry to the close of the war between the States. From 1865 he has been part and parcel of the REPUBLICAN, and his tact, temper, discretion, and ability contributed greatly to its usefulness in the stormy and critical times which preceded his assumption of full and entire editorial control. It is no disparagement of any other to say that Mr. Grant is the ablest journalist in the State, and it has always been a course of regret to those who best know and most appreciate his ability, that other duties and interests have to so great an extent diverted his attention from his paper. It is unfortunate for the public that his nose has not been held close to the editorial grindstone under circumstances to compel him all the time to the best work of which he is capable. On those occasions which he has adjusted himself to the conflict for all that is in him, he has excited the wonder and admiration of friends and enemies alike. He has repeatedly served the county in both branches of the legislature, and is now a senator from the district composed of the counties of Calhoun and Cleburne.
"The REPUBLICAN is a time-honored landmark in Alabama journalism, and it enters upon the second half century of its life with unabated vigor, with bright and brightening prospects, and with the support and confidence of all those who have stood by it and followed it through all the varying fortunes of the years that are gone."
The Result of Nebraska Politics.
Lincoln, Neb., January 18.—Ex-Governor Thayer, who has been suffering from nervous prostration, brought on by the political complication in the legislature, today became a raving maniac.

LETTER FROM MONTGOMERY.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 21, 1891.

Dear Republican:—The Legislature met yesterday and both houses went at once to work as if there had been no interruption of the session. Today was given up almost wholly to the House to debate. In the House the disturbing question was Mr. Adams' bill for the equalization of salaries of State officers. It passed the House by a vote of about fifty yeas to about thirty nays. It raises some of the salaries and decreases others. The railroads gain about $2,000 in saving on the salaries of the Railroad Commissioners, under the bill, but the State will pay some few hundred dollars more than it has been doing. In view of this state of facts it is difficult to see where the State is to be benefited, and the cry of economy and reform, under which it was put through the House, was misleading. Some of the State officers do more work than others, and some have to make heavy bonds, while others do not, and at first blush it appears unfair to place all of them named in the bill on an equality as to pay. I have not read the bill, as it only came into the Senate today, but from what I have heard of it, it appears to be just neither to the people of the State nor to the officers affected by it. This is not the bill, by the same gentleman, which proposes to deal with the fees of probate judges.

In the Senate the day was almost wholly consumed in a discussion of a constitutional amendment allowing the Legislature to permit the counties to levy a tax of one-fifth of one per cent, or 20 cents on the $100, for road purposes. The measure finally passed by a vote of twenty-one yeas to seven nays. It will have to be submitted to the people, if it passes the House, at the next general election, for adoption or rejection. Speaking of the Constitution reminds me that the Committee on Constitutional Amendments, etc., have determined to have no meeting until it is known whether the Force bill will pass the Federal Congress. If that infamous measure passes Congress the committee will no doubt at once submit a bill calling a constitutional convention, and to such a bill there will be little opposition in either House. The convention would meet as soon as may be and put such qualifications upon suffrage as would forever keep the State in the hands of the white race. If Mr. Hoar and other negro phobists of Congress succeed in their measure, they will disfranchise many negroes who now are allowed to vote freely and undisturbed, if they do not deprive the negro, in great measure, of the educational facilities now offered him by the State at the expense of the white people. If the negroes could know what direful results this Force bill had in store for them, they would pray every day that it might fail of passage; and they would publicly horsewhip the white hounds in the South who are urging its passage from no higher motive than to be certified into some miserable office by the supply ministers of the law.

It is every way desirable that Alabama should be properly represented at the World's Fair in Chicago, but so strong is the feeling here against the Force bill that Senator Miller, representing the richest mineral district in the South, interposed an objection to a measure looking to such representation until it can be known that we are not to have the Force bill, and the Senate sustained him unanimously. If that bill passes Congress the South will likely remain at home and let them have their World's Fair all by themselves. We will guard our alters and keep the spark of liberty alive until such time as the sense of justice of the whole country wipes the insult from the statute books. If the bill fails the South will be at the World's Fair "by a big majority," full of hope, proud of its display of wonderful resources and brimming over with good will for the people of every nook and corner of this broad Union. The bill is designed not so much to help the negro politically or to check Southern development, and it may be the supporters of the bill would be glad to see the South not represented in the display. Be this as it may, their bill will not permanently cripple the South. God has placed infinite treasure in her bosom. The world has caught a glimpse of its surpassing richness and the greed of man will develop it, though a thousand Force bills stood in the way and the South was again a barbarous waste. All we have to do is to wait and be patient. Our political and industrial and commercial independence of other sections of the Union that would oppress us as certain as that God rules the universe and orders the footsteps of men.

The House will soon be holding two sessions a day, and work will be rapidly dispatched. Several bills from Jacksonville and Anniston have been introduced in the House and Senate since the Legislature reconvened. The bill to provide for change of name of Jacksonville by election leaves the whole matter of ordering an election with the town council, and gives them a year in which to do so. It is understood if the town progresses on lines marked out the election will be ordered, otherwise not. There are several bills from our county on House calendar, and Mr. Cooper will secure their passage at the earliest practicable moment.

Resolution of the County Alliance and very numerous signed petitions from all parts of the county have been received here against the extension of the jurisdiction of the Anniston city court, and it is not at all likely that the bill can pass either house in the face of these protests. It still rests in the House committee where Mr. Cooper left it until the people could be heard from during recess. Both Senator and Representative feel that the people's will should govern in a matter of local legislation like this, and whatever may be their opinion as to the merits or demerits of the bill, they are willing that the bill should take that course desired by the people.

Mr. Cooper and I are rooming at the Merchant's Hotel, where we are very comfortably fixed, and where we will be glad to welcome any of our Calhoun friends who may come to the city during the session.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

THE infamous Force bill has not yet passed and Granger Hoar continues to weep.

AN oil well yielding twenty-five barrels per day has been struck near Moulton, Ala., causing an increase in the value of property.

MR. BLAIR, of New Hampshire, having been defeated for the United States Senate, by Mr. Gallinger, will now have an opportunity to use his time in teaching night school.

How does this sound? Senator Hill, of New York. The New York Legislature in joint ballot on Wednesday last elected Gov. David B. Hill to the Senate in place of Mr. Everts, Republican, by a vote of 81 to 70.

WE are in receipt of an invitation to attend the opening of Hotel Calhoun at Piedmont, the 25th instant. But for duties that call us elsewhere we should accept the invitation with great pleasure. Those who go will have an enjoyable time without doubt.

THE Advertiser says of Calhoun's senator: "Senator Grant is always on the side of the people and believes firmly in their having a hand in all changes which directly concern them, hence he has introduced a bill allowing them to vote upon the changes of the name of Jacksonville to Tredegar."

WE are in receipt of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia pamphlet setting forth the advantages of the city of Piedmont, one of the most progressive places along its line. It is a very handsome publication, full of information as to the resources of Piedmont and surrounding country. It is a glowing tribute to a progressive place, but does it no more than justice. Piedmont deserves all the good things said of it.

THERE has been talk about an extra session of Congress during the past few days. The backward state of the appropriation bills seems to make one extremely probable. Not one of those bills has yet been taken up by the Senate, which continues to waste its time on a bill which there seems absolutely no chance of passing. Now there are but little over thirty working days of the session left, and it looks as if the only outcome of the three months of Congress would be the free coinage of silver law.

THE long and busy life of America's great historian closed in Washington, D. C., last Saturday. It was a life full of useful labors and well-earned honors. From the outset of his career he was a devoted and painstaking student of history, and accumulated vast stores of knowledge that in after years were abundantly utilized. Mr. Bancroft was not a historian alone. He had filled positions of high trust in the service of his country. He was a staunch friend of American institutions, honoring them by his life and works; a lover of his country and a defender of the faith on which its foundations rest, in all respects an admirable as well as a gifted citizen. His death removes one of the most conspicuous and central figures of the century.

The oddity of human nature has found an apt illustration in some of the many claims for pension that have been received in Washington under the new law. We are told that many men have stretched their imaginations as well as their consciences in their efforts to be placed on Uncle Sam's great and rapidly-growing pension roll. They allege every disease and ailment known to the science of medicine, and then urge the claims with energetic persistence. Some of the causes alleged are as odd as they are interesting. An ex-soldier in Ohio wrote: "I don't exactly know what disease I am suffering from, but I do know that I deserve a pension, as I am suffering the pains of death all over my body." A veteran of the Fourth Wisconsin Infantry says he was salivated by reason of an excessive use of salt pork during his army career, and now he applies for a pension because he "got salivation in the army," as he puts it.

Lord Wolseley has stated before a parliamentary committee that if only 100,000 men were landed in any part of England he would not be able to prevent their capturing London.

McKEE ON CLEVELAND.

AN ABLE REVIEW OF THE PRESIDENTIAL SITUATION.

The Fatal Error of a Great Administration—Free Coinage is the Issue.

In the Montgomery Journal of Saturday Col. Robert McKee, the veteran journalist, who was in Washington during Cleveland's administration, writes as follows on the errors that point away from that great man as the next Democratic nominee for the presidency:

Mr. Cleveland is an able man. He is courageous and faithful. He has strong convictions on all questions of public policy. His administration was a clean and strong one, and it commanded the confidence of the democratic masses. He was not beloved by the politicians of high or low degree. Public sentiment compelled his second nomination for the presidency. The people were for him. The so-called leaders of the people, as a rule, would have preferred almost any other. Those who go to conventions, and name candidates, and run the political machine, and reap the personal rewards of party successes, yielded to a popular feeling that it was dangerous to antagonize.

Mr. Cleveland is a self-poised, self-contained, self-reliant man, with a surplus of self-confidence; and he has a resolute, sturdy, positive, and sometimes almost offensive way of following his own conclusions and purposes. He did not take into his confidence the leaders of his party, so many of whom were older and more experienced in public affairs than himself, nor even seem to do so by free and full consultation with them. He was often unnecessarily frank in intercourse with those who were entitled to the most kindly consideration at his hands and not infrequently gave needless offense when the soundest policy and the plainest duty alike prompted conciliation, concession and generous solicitation of friendly feeling. He is not magnetic, and it often happened that he repelled and wounded those who desired to render him service in the great office he filled. He prides himself specially on his knowledge of men and his ability to rightly judge and estimate them; and called into his cabinet more than one who made enemies of all who approached them in the discharge of their public duties. Taken altogether, his cabinet was not strong, and was unpopuliar.

Mr. Cleveland's wisest, strongest and most courageous act was his message to Congress in December, 1887, which frightened the politicians out of their wits, electrified the people and made possible a democratic majority of 150 in the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress. If that message had been written and delivered a year earlier, the result in 1888 would have been different, and the country would have been spared the reproach which attaches to Harrison and Reed; but it is never too late to do a wise and heroic thing, and Mr. Cleveland, risking a present success in which his own fortunes were involved, bravely appealed to the people against the money and power and influence of great interests which had been fostered to dangerous proportions by unjust class legislation. In that he sidetracked sectionalism, and made a practical and national issue, on which his party and himself were beaten only to prepare the way for a long series of victories. For the issue he compelled the party to make, by an act which made himself on a great economic question the platform of the party for the time being, once raised shall down no more until free trade shall become the settled policy of the United States. His defeat was followed by the McKinley bill, for which the favored classes stipulated before they furnished the money that brought it about; and that has made plain to all men what so many were slow to learn—that a tariff is a tax.

Mr. Cleveland's administration was not a faultless one. No administration, for that matter, ever will be faultless. He made mistakes that he would seem ought not to have been made. Some of these counted against him almost as much as some of his best acts; for some of his best acts were unpopular. His cabinet was not well selected. He put a pair of chumps on the bench of the supreme court. He forced a negro on to the people of Washington in a lucrative office that brought him in daily contact with them. He retained political enemies in many high offices which could safely be held only by his friends. These were minor errors, perhaps; and if these were all his administration would be classed as without material and essential fault.

But the fatal error of his administration was his opposition to the coinage of silver—not free coinage, but of any purchase or coinage. In his letter to Congressmen Warner, written ten days before his inauguration, he boiled down the whole monometallic argument which Sherman and Platt and Hiseock and other Republican senators have recently spent days in amplifying and illustrating, and pressed as an immediate duty that the purchase and coinage of silver be suspended. The whole argument was, as it is now, that the use of silver will displace gold and expel it from the country; and he drew a fearful picture of a financial crisis which would certainly be precipitated upon the country if the government continued to buy silver and coin it or issue certificates upon it, which "would involve the people of every city and every State in the Union in a prolonged and disastrous trouble." "Saddest of all," he said, "in every workshop, mill, factory, store, and on every railroad and farm, the wages of labor, already depressed, would suffer still further depression by a sealing down of the purchasing power of every so-called dollar paid into the hands of toil." That was the key-note of his administration on the coin question. The government did not suspend the purchase and coinage of silver. It bought and coined more than before; and gold has not been driven out of circulation or expelled from the country. The silver since issued in coin or certificates, increasing by so much the current money of the realm, has averted the crisis and all the awful consequences which he predicted as the inevitable and necessary result of more silver. He is not yet converted to broader views, though it is said he is now of opinion that a man may be a good democrat and favor the free coinage of silver.

If the silver question be now settled by a free coinage bill, and the question be thus taken out of politics, Mr. Cleveland's tariff message and tariff record will make him the most available, and the only certainly available candidate for 1892. But if this question is left open, or be reopened again after this present settlement, his nomination next year would invite certain and summary defeat. More money and lower taxes are joined in the demand of the people for relief from evils and burdens that have been borne until further endurance is no longer a virtue. Mr. Cleveland's relations to the democratic party and to the country depend on the removal of the silver question from politics by the enactment at this session of a free coinage law.

LEE'S BIRTHDAY.

Richmond and All Virginia Celebrated It Very Handsomely.

Richmond, Jan. 19.—To-day was the first public observance of Gen. R. E. Lee's birthday. It was made a legal holiday by the last legislature, and was celebrated by the principal officers throughout the commonwealth. State and municipal banks were all closed and business was quite generally suspended. No day of February or Fourth of July has been so universally celebrated since the close of the war as was to-day. In this city the parade was strictly a military one, participated in by veteran infantry, cavalry and artillery under the supervision of Lee camp of Confederate veterans, who paraded the principal streets, thence to the Lee monument, where thousands of people were gathered. Bands played popular Southern airs and infantry and artillery fired a salute.

To-night Lee camp gave a banquet, which was attended by Gov. McKinney, Mayor Ellyson and other distinguished citizens. Here and all along the line of the Confederate line it was observed. In Petersburg, A. P. Hill Camp of Confederate veterans, the fire department, Mexican veterans and various civic societies paraded the streets with ex-Gov. Cameron as chief marshal.

WM. K. McCONNELL DEAD.

He is Stricken with Apoplexy—Sketch of a Gallant Soldier.

William K. McConnell died this forenoon in Talladega at 11 o'clock of paralysis. He was stricken last Thursday night and rapidly grew worse until he died. Very few citizens in private station in the State of Alabama are more widely known and beloved than William K. McConnell. He was the son of Felix G. McConnell, who represented Alabama in the lower House of Congress in the forties, and the son imbibed all the patriotism and dauntless courage of his father.

He entered the civil war as color bearer of the Sixteenth Tennessee when a youth and was afterwards a member of the staff of Gen. Chas. M. Shelley of the Thirtieth Alabama. He was in every battle, conspicuous for his gallantry, and the war and his services as a soldier for the South ended together. He was a model soldier and was many times wounded.

For a number of years after the war he was engaged with the Selma and Meridian Railroad and was at one time tax collector of Dallas county. About six years ago he removed from Selma back to Talladega. No man ever bore himself with more loyalty to Southern institutions than he, or was more kind and generous towards her people. His death is lamented as a public calamity.

I know from experience that Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla is the right medicine to use when one feels weak and debilitated. I believe it saved my life, for I grew weaker every day from the effects of nervous debility, of which this remedy cured me completely.—C. J. Grave, Wilmington, Del.

Topeka, Jan. 21.—Five new Alliance senatorial candidates appeared in the field to-day. Some of them are avowed candidates, while others are only talked of by their friends. Most prominent among the later number is ex-Gov. John P. St. John, the noted prohibitionist.

In an address last night, before a large audience, he declared himself in favor of the object of the Farmers' Alliance and severely criticized Ingalls. Another candidate is General C. W. Blair, who fought on the Union side during the war with great honor. He is a Democrat and is considered by many as a good compromise candidate. Others are Col. W. A. Harris, of Leavenworth; C. M. Scott, State lecturer of the Alliance, and John Davis, Congressman-elect from the second district. Total number of Alliance men who want to succeed Ingalls is now an even dozen.

The Power of Money.

What an influence for good or evil is exerted by the proper or improper use of money. It seems to be the first essential of modern life. Sad indeed is the lot of that man or that woman without money and without friends. Especially in cases of sickness is the need of money felt most pressing, and yet even the rich with all their money fall into a state of poor health and die, whereas if their money was rightly expended and the proper remedies applied they might regain health and strength.

Z. A. Clark, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I spent four hundred and eighty dollars in gold to cure me of terrible blood poison that affected my limbs and nose and body, with running ulcers. One month's treatment of B. B. healed the ulcers, restored my appetite, strengthened my kidneys and added 21 pounds to weight."

Still, in spite of this and much other testimony there are many who refuse to try the remedy, seeming to prefer to pay large fees to physicians or visit distant springs in vain hopes of recovery. The great truth however, ever shines brightly and that is, that no one who ever gave B. B. [Bottan Blood Balm] a trial ever found disappointment therein.

O. H. Rudolph, Talladega, Fla., writes: "I had blood disease for six years, but nothing benefited me, although I paid two hundred and fifty dollars for treatment. At last I tried B. B. and found it a cheap blood purifier."

An Editor Assailed.

Middleborough, Ky., Jan. 17.—The Daily News yesterday contained a caustic article on the management of the postoffice in general and on A. P. Robinson, the assistant postmaster, in particular.

Yesterday afternoon young Winslow Robinson, a brother of the government official, entered the News office and assailed Thomas H. Arnold, the editor. A fierce fight ensued, and both parties showed the result of the encounter. Many threats are made on both sides and sensational developments are promised.

SHOT DEAD.

SUSPICION FALLS ON A BROTHER OF THE DEAD MAN.

A Horrible Tragedy in Shelby County, Near Columbiana—The People Will Do All to Ferret Out the Mystery—No Arrests Have Been Made.

Columbiana, Jan. 19.—A dastardly murder was committed about six miles west of this place on the night of the 18th instant between 7 and 8 o'clock a. m. Reinhold was the unfortunate victim.

He had finished his supper and was sitting in his room with his back to the window fronting the public road, when some one emptied the contents of a heavily loaded, double-barrelled shotgun into his head.

He died instantly.

The identity of the assassin or assassins is cloaked in mystery.

Suspicion has fastened upon the brother-in-law of the deceased, and one King, but nothing, to-night, can be secured to support the suspicion except the fact that there has been for a long time bad feeling existing between them.

A determined effort will be made to bring to justice the offenders and the entire community concur in the hope that they may be speedily discovered.

Make Glad Hearts That Are Sad.

The youth of both sexes that find themselves in a state of ill health at that interesting period when they reach manhood and womanhood, should not let themselves despond. Away with gloomy melancholy! Life is before you, and with proper treatment and care perfect health will be your portion. A perfect man! A perfect woman! The noblest work of God! Keep clear of quack doctors and their pernicious literature. They seek to rob you of your purse and to gain this end would fatten the very life out of you. All you need at this time of life is an occasional use of that excellent strengthening medicine invented by that eminent physician Dr. John Bull, of Louisville, Ky., called Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla. It is a complete regulator of every organic function, giving health and power to every part, and assuring perfect self control. How glad hearts that are sad will be when they know this.

IN WINTER TIME.

W. L. Shoemaker in Washington Star.

In winter time where sleep the innumerable lives.
That will the spring and summer time
make gay.
An pupae or in embryo, till arrives
The time to break their bonds and soar away.
Now with blind motions only each one
lives.
The bees, we know, bide happy in their hives.
But where are all the small birds and their wives.
That brave the snow and frost, and near us stay.
In winter time?
Where are the brook's inhabitants?—each drives
Into what secret chambers? Whither drives
The cold the field and woodland tribes
from day?
In air and water again will millions play;
The spirit, that animates them all, survives
in winter time.

A BACHELOR'S REVERIE.

BY BRUTUS, JR.

To marry or not to marry;
Ah, there's the rub!
Whether 'tis nobler in the average youth
To steep his soul in the nectar of conjugal
bliss;
Or, shunning the wiles of the feminine gender,
Sink sadly into the soup.
That is the question.

—GINKER.

Pause a moment, my dear readers,
while I throw open the second story window of my heart and expose to your pitiless inspection the panorama that dwelleth therein.

Why am I a bachelor?

Is it because I am a railer, because I believe marriage is a failure?
No; for under certain circumstances I believe that gray-whiskered
institution is a success.

Is it because, being a penurious
pencil pusher, who dines on cheese and pretzels to-day and pretzels and cheese to-morrow, I scoff at such a syrrup and taffy state of being as love?

No; for I have known of several instances where certain men have absolutely fallen in love with certain widows with fat bank accounts.
Or vice versa. Now that's where I get my belief in love, strong and unchangeable—as long as the money lasts.

Perhaps it is because my tailor persists in drawing my weekly stipend
at the business office, and because that dear creature, my landlady, is always so clever and amiable on payday that I beguile her with matinee
tickets, with the dimes she said
tailor has kindly left me for back hire, then abuse my credit at the several shoe dealers in consequence.

Probably it is because I am too
timid, shrinking from that awful,
august, omnipresent and all-mettle-
some ambiguity of the feminine persecution, the mother-in-law.

No; for I sang "Annie Rooney" at a Sunday school concert once, and I fancy I am brave enough to face a chorus of such creatures.

But listen: peruse my anecdote of yore, then judge me tenderly, yea,
very tenderly, for I have suffered much.

Follow me as I resurrect the phantom pictures of the past, as I paint
the chronicle of the present, as I lift
the shroud of the dead future and disclose to you, my sympathetic and misguided friends, the adventures of a love-lorn youth!

I.

On a lonesome day in the dreary
past, by some misconception of Providence, I was thrown into the company of a certain young lady. Her name, for certain sake, I will not mention, for not only does her parent square-toed boots of abnormal dimensions, but she has a big brother who is a terror to even a gas-bill collector, and there is a canine on the premises, the very memory of whose moonlight gambols fills me with fear and trembling.

She was not altogether pretty. It was the dazzling splendor of her intellect that captivated my fresh young heart. Her hair was auburn—yes, a very bright auburn—and beneath the scarlet-rouge on her countenance, lovely, large, brown freckles were semi-distinguishable. But so enchanted was I with her intellectual genius that I willingly blinded myself to all else—even her springheeled shoes and the corkscrew bangs which she wore at the back of her neck. I will remark that she wore her front hair Pompadour to enhance the imposingness—this was a favorite word of hers—of her albaster brow.

She fed me on historical, oratorical, geographical, biographical and every other sort of discussion, talked politics and so bamboozled me with poetical effusions that on sundry occasions I was at a loss to ascertain the precise location of the keyhole in my domicile door.

We existed thusly for numerous days and nights, including afternoons and evenings. Then came the fatal hour—ah! how well I remember it!

Her conversational spasms were so habitually extravagant that I rarely ever had opportunity to plead my suit, to uncoil the coils of my passion, as it were, and ardently declare the perturbation that agitated

my vest on the left hand side.

On the occasion in question I hid myself to a convenient confectionery
and purchased a liberal sackful of yellow taffy. Alas, it was the instrument of my discomfiture! At the conclusion of her inaugural flight of verbosity I begged her to accept of my hospitality. Now she was fond of yellow taffy. With an avidity not warranted by the circumstances, as I afterward learned, she proceeded to masticate an egg-sized lump of the succulent stuff.

Then I began to unlimber my battery to storm the citadel of her heart.
But, oh, heavens! the taffy had become tangled in her osculating apparatus, and before I knew what the matter was, the prettiest set of commercial teeth I ever saw came flying wildly across the room. For an instant I was paralyzed, then the last thing I remember was a vision of mantled loveliness scrambling
through the parlor door.

I stole softly away from the scene of my wrecked hopes, and wandering out to Grant park, beside the little babbling brooklet that ripples
into the placid lakelet, whereon the gentle moon was wont to beam, and wherever the pale spring zephyr did sometimes wander in lissome sweetness—there, on that self-same night,
did I forever cast off her chromo
from beneath my outworn vest.

My heart bled sorely, but I survived.

II.

Survived, only to become entangled in Cupid's net again.

This time it was a coy school maiden whose bright blue eyes made me forget to go home to dinner.

I absolutely haunted the Girl's High school building, and always had business in that neighborhood at the hour when that dear girl was free from school room cares. Then the pupils I wrote about those school entertainments! I came near getting fired bodily by it.

Matinee tickets went high school-ward with a recklessness that was beautiful, and I painfully remember that several candy dealers were compelled to employ additional collectors
to attend to my accounts.

All this may sound extravagant for a common pencil pusher, but—you should interview those candy dealers!

Some crank has said that the course of true love never did run smooth. It does sometime—for a while.

It ran wonderfully smooth with me and my coy maiden of the high until I made all the candy shopkeepers tired and the matinee tickets began to slow off. Then she jilted me.

I never go to the high school now.
It causes a feeling of sweet sadness to crawl over me, filling me with dark, dank despair, like that which falls with a dull, sickening thud upon a suffering preacher when he sees the collection basket go around among a Christmas-tide congregation.

III.

Then I sat up with a romantic young lady, who does not live on Peachtree Street.

Ah, you should see us!—sometimes.

This young Juliet and I have not quit doing on each other, so I shall have to be careful in what I say.

She calls me "Tootsie," and whenever she coos I murmur "My Oot-sie."

She's, oh! so romantic! Whenever I'm overcome with sadness at the contemplation of my own importance; whenever my heart is heavy with the burden of innocence
and my pockets light with the weight of my overdrawn salary, I love to seek the fairy bower of my precious Lovie Dovie, and there, under the influence of her romantic witchery, forget the terrible insignificance of my own identity.

I love to lose myself in reverie as she dwells on the beauty of the broad, blue sky, or delightfully describes on me the symmetry of a street car mute, or imagine myself a happy, light-hearted man, while her lustrous orbs beam with radiance as she gazes out onto the wintry landscape and softly tells me of the surpassing loveliness of her pa's new cow pasture, wherein the little lillie-pops pop and the horseapple tree
rears its majestic head.

Ah! what a solace to man is woman
with romantic soul!

IV.

Again let me draw the curtain that screens a hideous past and reveal another secret of my "Dead Heart."

Alas! alas! this lady love was stage struck. In the heyday of her infancy she had begun to display
those qualities of elocutionary power which in after years caused her friends so much commiseration. As a school girl she was famous for the way in which she clawed the atmosphere and tore her blond hair
all. As a coy maiden, she retained
all these rare Christmas gifts of nature, and ever and anon at amateur entertainments or Sunday school festivals—where hospitality abounds

and ice cream wanders in the background, where many other pretty maids bone you for dimes to buy new Sunday school organs, and where you long for the cake that never comes—on events of this description
her kazoo-like voice could be distinctly heard as she elocuted a love ditty in which a letter carrier was the hero or she broke the skylights with the distressing articulation of
of some melo-tragic rendition.

Ah, what a sweetheart she was!

Many a nickel have I dropped in a street car slot, her gallant escort on occasions somewhat similar to the above. In return, as we promenaded homeward under the starling lights,
trays of myriad electric lights,
above which twinkled countless millions of stars, set in their settings,
of azure azureness, she would lean her
blonde head upon my manly shoulder,
and in accents low and rippling,
sweet as the gurgle of the mountain stream, whisper that her pa was at the club, that I need not fear.

At other times, when we were quietly sitting by the parlor fire, listening for the little clock to tinkle
the midnight hour, with sudden suddenness she'd rise to her majestic height, and with eyes blazing with unsubdued enthusiasm, her lovely face flushed as though she had dropped her back hair at a matinee,
her Sullivan-like arms gesticulating
wildly and her pearly teeth clinched, strike an attitude that the Jersey
Lilly might have been proud of.
Then again she might not.

In the very ecstasy of adoration I organized a dramatic club in order that the budding genius of my sweetheart might bloom to its most beautiful proportions.

Many days did we rehearse our parts—I was to play "Mack" to her
"Macbeth" and many nights did I lay awake thinking of the glory that awaited us. But sweet dreams are always short, and my bliss was too blissful to last.

We tried to get the opera house to play in. But it was no go. Fruit was too plentiful that season and egg-stains are hard to remove from scenery.

At this climax a fellow pencil pusher got on to the plot and wrote us up. He gave us the razzle dazzle.

She thought I did it—so I don't go
there any more.—Atlanta Constitution.

Weakness.

There is no symptom of ill-health
more discouraging than weakness.
That constant feeling of fatigue and disinclination to exert oneself. Life
to such seems languid and insipid,
and the invalid almost becomes reconciled to die. Do you suffer thus?
Would you be enthused? Do you wish your strength renewed? Try a bottle of Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla. It will greatly assist your recovery.
Soon will you then experience a feeling of new life and returning power.
No longer will the least exertion give fatigue and cause your heart to palpitate unnaturally. No more will that feeling of dizziness oppress you when you suddenly get up from your chair. No longer will indigestion and urinary disorders continue to break down your constitution. Every function will resume its natural activity and you will soon enjoy a glorious feeling of self-control and confidence. No longer nervous, afraid and imaginative of gloomy disaster. Ambition will take the place of discouragement and you will be happy in health and kindly hope.—

The least exercise tired me out. I could not get up from my chair with-health and strength. I recommend

A TEXAS TALE.

THE STORY OF A TYPICAL PIO-NEER COUPLE.

Alice McGowan Tells Some Breezy Incidents of Frontier Life in Texas.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 20, '91.

Fifteen or twenty years ago, when
this was a wild and remote frontier,
the matrimonial bark in these parts
differed from her sister of the older States, just as ships built in Holland might differ from the ships of old Spain.

Back East she was a heavy and somewhat cumbersome craft, stanch enough, but awkward and slow of motion, a round-nosed, ponderous affair, suited only to hold a straight course in an open sea from port to port, unable to make much headway
against adverse winds or perplexing
cross currents and utterly helpless
in a narrow and risky channel, a strange harbor, or on a bad coast.

But out here in those days she was clipper built and clipper rigged.
Swift, clean, rakish, she was planned to endure all stress of weather,
to withstand or escape from every danger.

She could turn and tack and double, slip through tortuous channels,
among reefy islands and creep off a wicked lee shore inch by inch, beating as close to the wind as the cleverest little lugger; and when she got out in the open, walk down the gale
with all her dry goods flying like a thing of life.

This simile was suggested to my mind by the contemplation of a rather singular and interesting trio of people who fell under my observation when I first came to this part of Texas. I should not say trio, either, but an individual and a pair. It wasn't exactly a three-handed matrimonial arrangement, though the three had been connected by marriage at different times. They formed a sort of landmark amid the staid conventionalities which now prevails
in such matters.

Old Mrs. Pardee was the first one
I discovered. I wanted a saddle pony and was told that she had several good ones in from her ranch, so I went over rather hesitatingly to look at them, and see if I could make a reasonable trade with a woman.

She was an impressive, fine-looking woman, apparently about forty years of age, with a regular, fire-proof countenance, iron gray hair, features of granite, and the hardest, steepest eyes I ever saw. There was quiet strength and shrewdness in every line of the commanding face and figure.

We went out to look at the ponies and I was at once struck with the soundness of her judgment, the completeness of her knowledge, and,
above all, the entire lack of that affection which I have hardly ever failed to find in the horse talk of men.

"He's got some mean tricks," she remarked of the pony I fancied
most. "I'm not just sure about him
as I don't break my own horses any more. I have to trust it to the men, and a man hasn't got any sense with a horse."

She didn't break her horses now!
The speech sounded so sharply incongruous, coming from a woman
who, with the proper costuming,
would have made quite an ideal ball room chaperon that I could have laughed.

She brought out a rope, made her pony and laid it over the pony's head as he came racing round, at the first throw, bridled and saddled him,
and suggested calmly that I'd better
try him.

"But he'll pitch, won't he," said I.
"Do you think I can stay on him?"
"O, yes; he'll pitch a little, but you can ride him; ain't you been using Shoreman's pinto?" She's meaner than Jim, here. Just lay the quilt on him when he pitches and let him run—he's the fastest and best-gaited thing in the lot—and he'll be all right.

I was so flattered by the implied compliment coming from this grim-visaged woman, that I would not have hesitated under its stimulus to climb upon a freshly roped zebra at her suggestion; so we made the attempt, she holding him while I tried vainly to get my foot into the stirrup and jump on. It was a failure, and I looked around, saying something about "Mr. Pardee." She gave me a keen look and an averted smile, jerked the coveting pony down with her left hand, held out her right for me to mount from. Up I went, and we flew through the gate.

Obedient to her instructions, I used the quilt vigorously and he never pitched but one. We got back in about fifteen minutes, he very civil and I a little blown, I with my eyes full of tears from the sharp wind, a heart swelling with pride in my own horsemanship and a great respect for the old lady's judgment. The pony became mine.

So much was my fancy caught and held by the woman's face and character that I inquired concerning her and found hers to be a very interesting story.

She and her husband came to west Texas nearly forty years ago, and went to cattle ranching among the coyotes, panthers, buffaloes and Apaches. And they were an ideal pair for the business. He was about 30
at that time, a long, thin, awkward man, all bone and sinew, who could be out on the range day and night
for a week without seeming to get any bonier or more silent than his wife.

He was not given to much talk,
always a quiet, peaceable man, but when he was interfered with or his rights infringed upon, knowing no argument but his long brown rifle.

She was a tall, strong, big-boned
woman, a typical pioneer Texas matron, afraid of nothing and able to do as much and as hard work as her husband. She had no nerves, and simply didn't know the sensation of fear as we understand.

When her husband was away she rode the range, bought, sold, bargained and attended to all the business generally. "You may think this
"riding the range" a rather picturesque proceeding, which consists in getting on a good pony and riding
over a fine ranch to look at the cattle. In point of fact it meant then to be out in all weather, to rope and doctor, and "rattle" with any sick or injured cattle, the hunting and destroying of big timber wolves and panthers, and the liability of running at any time onto prowling Indians or cattle thieves; and these gentry would always quite as lieve
meet "Old Pard" and his ready rifle
as encounter his intrepid spouse.

This is one of the many stories
told me illustrative of her unflinching coolness and courage.

One day, when she was alone at the ranch house, a half dozen Indians came in suddenly and asked for something to eat. After she had fed them, they walked out toward the corral where the cow-ponies were, and announced that they were going to have some horses. She stood in the door, rifle in hand, and ordered them not to go near the corral, or lay a hand on the gate. They were "strangers in these parts," and one fellow, seeing her only a squaw,
and alone, walked insolently toward
the corral, without even taking the trouble to unsling the gun from his back. She dropped him in the middle of the corral, and the others
with her rifle, telling them not to raise a hand to their guns, but to get out at once.

They contemplated the fine and workmanlike shot, then looked at the steady muzzle and the cold, gray eyes; and it is a real fact, as dozens
of people hereabouts will tell you, they got.

Such a woman was the ideal helpmate for a pioneer ranchman. But she was not content to be a helpmate.
She was willing they should be partners, but she must be senior partner;
her decisions must be unquestioned,
her decision law, or there was trouble.

Old Pard chafed silently for more than twenty years at this state of affairs, and at length his smoldering resentment of the vice-regal position vouchsafed him at home burst forth.

It was upon his return from the fall round-up, where his solid sense
and keen judgment were much prized, that he presumed to discuss,
not criticize or object to, but merely discuss some extensive sales she had made, when she cut him short angrily, and flared up into a rage. She was violent of tongue, apt in the art
of recrimination, as fluent in the use of feminine weapons, as she was proficient with the rifle, and if Pard did not learn all about himself it was because he neglected the opportunities thrust upon him.

The contrast between the atmosphere he always breathed elsewhere
and this sort of thing was too much for him.

He heard her out. Then he got up and said:

"I'm a pretty good fellow on everybody's ranch but my own. Here
I'm a—chump. What I say don't go; but I will. You can keep the cattle that's left—there's more than half—and the range, and I'll take what money there is and out for California.

He went over to the little safe
where the money and papers were kept, knelt down, and was engaged in counting out his portion, when he felt a light touch on the back of his head. Turning, he looked into the barrel of his wife's rifle.

"Put it back," she said.

The angry woman was all gone,
and she was her usual self once
more, a man, and more than a man.
It was amazing; it was incredible;
certainly no man could have made him do it; he would have had the whole top of his head off sooner;
but he slowly showed the money
back, and shut the safe door.

It was a sort of armed truce after that, and in less than a year there was a separation, a divorce; the ranch and cattle were sold and the money divided between them, dollar for dollar.

They were now fifty and fifty-five respectively.

She had no chick nor child of her own, and no disposition to invest in another husband. She took her $30,000 and bought property in a new town near the range; and, from the income it yielded her, subsequently started a small horse ranch
where she raises a fine class of graded horses. He lives about forty miles out on a cattle range, and whenever they meet casually, in town, there is a friendly business conversation. If she ever needs money for any of her enterprises it is to him she applies—and always gets
it, too.

Old Pard made different use of his liberty. Having been surfeited, it is to be supposed, with the kind of mate he had had, he went to the opposite extreme, and within a year after the divorce married a pretty 15
year old Mexican girl of the better class, with great liquid eyes, flashing white teeth, and a voice like a cooing pigeon, took her hundreds of miles across the country in wagons and stages to the railroad, and went on a long and happy wedding journey, bringing back from it quantities of pretty dresses, feminine adornments, and a seven hundred dollar piano, the first one seen in these parts.

To do the thing right she should have been torn from the arms of her caballero, and forced by a cruel parent to marry the old man for his money.

Not a bit of it.

He courted her, just as other lovers court their fair; she seemed quite as fond of him as he was of her, and they live, I am sure, just as happily
as less strangely assorted pairs.

He goes patiently to the balls—
where I have often seen them—and watches her with pride, while she dances like a wave, a bird in air, or a swaying branch of blossoms. Then,
when she is tired and ready to go,
the tall old man—now fully 70—rises
up, wraps up the smiles, the glis-
tering cheeks and brilliant eyes giving, and takes her home to the four rosy children, who have all their father's character and odd individuality, and their mother's laughing beauty.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Exciting Time in the Senate.

Correspondence Birmingham Age-Herald.

Montgomery, Jan. 24.—In the senate the bill came up for extending the usefulness and efficiency of the geological and agricultural survey,
amongst other features of the bill
there being an appropriation of $10-000. The discussion of the matter gave rise to the stormiest scene of the session. Mr. Wiley attacked the bill, saying that it was for the benefit of railroad corporations, land syn-dicates, and owners of mineral property. He reflected on the congressional grants of lands to railroads,
and then went on to say that the farmers of Alabama were opposed to the proposed appropriation of $10-000. They did not wish to see the legislature plunging its hands into the treasury and taking out money for such a purpose. It didn't do the farmers any good. The congress,
with leaning to paternal government,
had voted away to alien owners 20-000,000 acres of the public domain,
and had neglected the farmers.

Mr. Grant asked Mr. Wiley to name anything which the farmers had asked for and hadn't got.

"They have asked you for bread
and you have given them a stone," replied Mr. Wiley, and he went on with his talk, being interrupted once or twice by Mr. Grant. And when Mr. Grant got the floor he said that "he did not propose to stand there in his place and demagogue with the people."

Mr. Wiley asked if the senator meant to charge him with being a demagogue.

Mr. Grant replied, in effect, that if the cap fitted Mr. Wiley he might wear it.

"Then," replied Mr. Wiley, "if the senator charges that I am guilty of demagoguery he states a falsehood, and he knows he states that which is false."

Mr. Grant responded very coolly that he had nothing to retract, and that he would not be a party to personal abuse on the floor of the senate.

Mr. Wiley was white with passion, and said that Mr. Grant had "stated what no honest man would state and what no brave man would wear."

At this there was a great deal of excitement, and a senator and the sergeant-at-arms stood between Mr.
Wiley and Mr. Grant, the latter of whom showed no excitement and merely stated that he could take care of himself, and personal matters he always dealt with in their proper place. In other words, Mr. Grant

would see Mr. Wiley outside the senate. At this point the personal side of the question was passed by and the senators proceeded to a discussion of the bill.

It was decidedly the breeziest incident of the session in either house.
Just before the senate adjourned,
Mr. Wiley rose and briefly and straightforwardly apologized for having been guilty of that which was offensive to the senate and to the senator from Calhoun.

Mr. Grant, in response, referred to Mr. Wiley's "manly course," and then he explained his part in the affair, expressing great regret that any difficulty had occurred. And there the matter ended.

In regard to the merits of the geological survey bill, Mr. Grant made an able and comprehensive argument, pointing out that the appropriation was "the merest dribble
when the vast importance of the survey was taken into consideration.
The legislature owed it to the state;
it owed it to the small holders of lands in the mineral regions, and they owed it to the spirit of progress
to pass this or some similar bill.
Speaking comparatively, we were ignorant of our own wealth. Even in Pennsylvania, after all the expenditure and annual appropriations,
besides which $10,000 is infinitesimal,
it was not yet known what that state had in minerals. The bill ought to pass.

Mr. Milner said that the lack of comprehensive geological survey had made it possible for men of money to cheat the small holders of mineral lands out of their property, and it had been done.

Mr. Smith of Mobile was opposed to the bill. He thought the private owners of land should pay for the survey of such land.

Mr. Hargrove (Mr. Skeggs in the chair) spoke very ably in support of the bill, going into an exhaustive statement respecting the necessity for a more thorough and complete survey of the mineral districts. He mentioned various minerals that were known to exist in the state, but which had never been properly placed before the world because of inadequate appropriations for official examinations into the deposits. In fifteen years Pennsylvania had spent $1,042,040 for geological surveys, while Alabama had spent on an average but $2,686 a year. "Even Arkansas was spending over $100,000
a year, allowing her geologists $5,000
a year and giving him four assistants each $1,000 a year. It was of great value to the state. He himself knew a man who had invested $100,000 in Alabama lands through information obtained from the published reports of the state geologist.

In this brief report on some of justice can be done Mr. Hargrove's exhaustive argument, and the same may be said of Mr. Grant's speech.

Mr. Milner said it was well known that the iron and steel experts of England and Germany, who recently visited Birmingham, placed no confidence in expert reports as to the value of mineral deposits; but that those visitors stated that they trusted alone to the official reports.

The amendment offered by Mr.
Hargrove was $10,000, instead of $7,500, as recommended by the committee, and that amendment was voted down. The question recurring on the bill as reported by the committee, it was read a third time, and passed, by a vote of 19 yeas to 8 nays.
The bill increases the appropriation
$2,500, and increases Prof. Eugene Smith's salary from $150 to $200 a month. Practically, these are the only changes in the law.

Mr. Hargrove, Mr. Milner and Mr.
Grant made a brave fight for $10,000,
but they lost. Yet a half loaf is better than no bread at all.

The bill, as passed, appropriates
seven thousand five hundred dollars annually the geological survey. The present appropriation is $5,000 annually.

We want to get up a regular church

We noticed that most of our mer-

absentees as far as we have heard being Bondurant, the grocer, and Doster,
the druggist.

We hope those of our friends who have items of interest concerning our people or town will hand them
in to this office, as it will greatly facilitate the efforts of the local editor towards getting out a readable sheet.

Thunder and lightning held high carnival for a short time about three o'clock Thursday morning. This was their first appearance this season,
and they were undoubtedly greeted by a large, if not appreciative, audience.

The pastor of the Baptist church,
Rev. H. W. Williams, will preach
Sunday morning and night; subject of morning sermon, "The Unpardonable Sin." Everybody, especially strangers, are cordially invited to attend these services.

Mr. James Connolly, formerly of Norfolk, Va., has settled in Jacksonville.
Mr. Connolly is the painter who executed the beautiful oil finished work on the interior of the Catholic Church. He is an expert in his line and we hope that he will be well patronized.

We regret to announce that Mrs.
Geo. H. Snyder, a daughter of the late Judge J. W. H. Underwood, of Rome, Ga., and well known in this vicinity was shot and killed at San Marcos, Texas, by her husband last Sunday. It seems that her husband was threatening to chastise their son when Mrs. Snyder interfered with the above fatal result.

Interspersed with warm rains we have had some delightful and balmy weather the past week. On Thursday and Friday especially the atmosphere was particularly mild for this season of the year. The year 1891 seems to be doing its best towards verifying the truth of the old saying that an early Easter brings an early Spring.

The very vigorous manner in which "Old King Cole" moved his right arm at Mrs. Hammond-Jarley's wax works was in striking contrast to the feeble way in which his twin brother on the King's left side
managed to perform its allotted task.
Some one suggested that it was because the right hand held the bottle, but we don't believe that, and don't want such a thing repeated.

breaking of his saddle girth.

Hon. E. F. Crook, Judge of Probate, who has been confined to his house by a severe cold for nearly a week was able to be out again on Thursday. We have missed him of late.

Mr. J. B. Bruce, of Tradersville, S. C., is in the city this week and paid
this office a call. He has been on our subscription list for some time,
and has shown his faith in our town
in times past by investing in realty here.

Mr. Louis F. Miller and family moved into the Nisbet residence on Reservoir Hill the first of the week, and hereafter Mr. Miller will register from Jacksonville unless the people see fit to change the name to Tredegar.

The Young People.

We learn that the delightful progressive euchre party which was given at the residence of Mrs. Williams last week was the first of a short series which are to be given weekly. We hope next time to be supplied with the names of the winners of the prizes, as we shall take pleasure in publishing them. We will take the liberty to remark right here that we are glad to see the young people reviving some of the social customs for which our town was justly famous in the olden
times.

Another Improvement.

Our energetic townsman, C. D.
Martin, has just completed repairing
the old stable east of the square.
It has been enlarged and refitted,
and is now occupied by fifty mules belonging to Mr. Martin's grading outfit.

THE NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH

Will Be Dedicated Next Sunday by Bishop O'Sullivan.

The altar for the new Catholic Church on Francis avenue was received from Boston on last Monday and is now in place. It is a unique piece of workmanship, of pure white,
with gold trimmings, and adds much to the appearance of the inside of the church. It was the gift of Rev.
Father Gaboury. To-morrow dedication services will be held by Bishop O'Sullivan, of Mobile, assisted by Rev. Father Friend. The public is cordially invited to attend.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY.

A New Ice Factory to Be Started in Jacksonville.

Last Thursday night a meeting of those interested in the establishment of an ice plant in Jacksonville was held at the office of George H. Montgomery, over the Tredegar National Bank. James H. Hard, of Bessemer, explained to those present the object of the meeting, informing them in detail just what was necessary to make the ice industry a success.

After a full discussion a committee of three, consisting of George H.
Montgomery, James Crow and D. J.
Privett was appointed to go among our citizens and solicit subscriptions to the capital stock of a proposed ice company. Application has already been made for a charter for the new company. The enterprise should be heartily supported by those of our citizens who have the welfare of our town at heart, as the establishment of a ten ton ice plant in our midst means not only increased values in our realty, but increased prosperity
to our town.

THE STEEL COMPANY

And the Work It is Doing for Jacksonville.

Work on our steel plant is progressing
about as fast as can be expected, considering the bad weather we have been having of late. On Wednesday Mr. Warlick, who has charge of the graders on the steel plant site, was compelled to again stop work on account of rain.
Such delays, though not serious, are very annoying. On Monday the breaking of a wheel at the quarry caused a short interruption in raising the stone, but did not delay the work there.

On last Saturday Roadmaster
Payne, of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia system, arrived in town, bringing with him the long looked for permission from his company giving to Contractor Twine the right to run the tram road over the right of way and under the track of the East Tennessee railroad. The tram road will at once be extended to the site of the proposed buildings.

Next issue we hope to announce that the contractor is delivering stone on the ground.

A visit to the company's quarry
will repay any of our citizens for their trouble. We inspected it last Monday, and found a large area uncovered, which showed as handsome
a brown sandstone, with a bluish tinge, as can be found anywhere in the land. In short we were proud of it, and will predict that it will prove better than a gold mine for our town.

Colonel Alexander, the constructing engineer, is still in the North on business for the company.

Mrs. Jarley's Wax Works.

A very appreciative as well as a large audience greeted the exhibition of Mrs. Jarley's Wax "Figures" at the college last Monday night, and all pronounced the entertainment a decided success. The pose, the clock-like acting, and the draping were equally well executed, and the whole affair reflected the greatest credit on Mrs. Patton and Mrs. Brothers, who were at the head of the novel display.
The character of Mrs. Jarley was taken by Miss Addie Hammond, who performed her difficult task in a most enviable manner. While space forbids our mentioning each feature of the entertainment, we cannot forget telling the public that the heavy weights, Tom and Peter, were personated by Mel. Carpenter and John Roland, respectively, and our genial friend Dr. Stone "literally" danced attendance, with his screwdriver and oil can, as "Slum." A special feature was the promptness with which the different scenes followed each other, and the short waits were made still shorter by delightful vocal and instrumental music, the former being rendered by Mrs. Sadie Bowling and Miss Undine Lane, and the latter by Miss Dollie Lane and Prof.
McKee.

Masonic Gathering.

On next Tuesday night Hiram Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons
will march to the Tredegar Inn, accompanied by their ladies, to enjoy a banquet prepared in Manager Gasser's most approved style. The fact that the ladies are going to be present
will clearly prove that the order
does not bear that enmity towards the gentler sex, which we were told of when a small boy.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became a Girl, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

New Buildings.

The new restaurant building on Driscoll street, near the depot, is nearing completion.

Mrs. Brewton is erecting a corrugated iron store room on Main street,
next to the store of J. M. Vansandt.

The ten double cottages which are being erected by J. W. Burke and
C. D. Martin are nearing completion.
Nine of them are located on Pennsylvania avenue, and the other one is just East of Reservoir Hill.

S. D. G. Brothers and others have commenced the erection of a corrugated iron building between Mr.
Bondurant's new grocery store and the postoffice. It will be occupied by our new townsman, Mr. L. F.
Miller, as a meat and vegetable market.

We know of three brick business buildings which are to be started the coming month, besides a large number of frame dwellings. This shows that our people are thoroughly alive
to the fact that we have not at present adequate accommodations for those who have signified their intention of removing to our town just as soon as the weather permits the steel company to put a large force of men on their new buildings.

The Fuel Supply.

The Tredegar Brick Company received one carload of coal, and Mr.
Martin received two carloads of the same article during the past week,
so that our people are once more enjoying the luxury of coal fires.
Manager Hester informs us that it is the intention of the Tredegar
Brick and Tile Company to hereafter
keep on hand a supply of coal sufficient to prevent another coal famine
such as we have just experienced.

He Was Told to Prepare to Die.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. J. H. Harrell, Ridge Farm, Ill.: "Swift's Specific
(S. S. S.) saved my life and restored my health after the leading physicians of the State pronounced my case hopeless. From childhood I suffered agonies from a constitutional blood trouble, that gradually grew worse as I advanced in years. Finally a great ulcerous sore broke out on my leg, which compelled me to go on crutches, and that added to the Rheumatism that had set in, made me almost helpless. The physicians who by the way were the best in this State, pronounced the disease incurable, and told me to prepare for death. About this time my attention was drawn to an advertisement of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) and I commenced taking it, a drawing man would grasp at a straw. I commenced to improve from the first dose,
and continued to improve until I am now sound and well. The ulcerous sore on my leg has healed up, and not even a scar is left. I am to-day as free from disease as any man living.
Early last fall I discontinued the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), and have not had a day's sickness since.
I feel it a duty to me to my fellow-man, and to the manufacturers of Swift's Specific to make the above statement.
